Kentucky Afield

by John Wilson

This is the time of year when a camper, hiker or fisherman is most likely to encounter young wild animals in the woods. The first impulse, in many instances, is a desire to "adopt" the baby skunk, raccoon, fawn or whatever.

But the best course of action, according to wildlife experts, is to leave baby animals, even those seemingly "orphaned" where they are.

Although this advice may at first glance seem hard hearted, it is actually kinder in the long run for both the animal and the humans involved.

In the first place, the baby animal may not be orphaned at all. A fawn, for example, that seems all alone in the big woods probably has an anxious mother waiting nearby, but she will not show herself while a human is in the vicinity.

The care and feeding of a young animal is demanding and complicated, and most of those taken from the wild will die unless they are given the expert care that only a knowledgeable person can provide.

And if the animal does survive past infancy, other problems arise. Unlike dogs or cats, which have been domesticated for centuries, wild animals seldom lose their "wild" nature. An adult deer, particularly a buck, can be extremely dangerous and a raccoon, even one raised in the house, starts thinking he can whip anybody in the family when he gets to weigh about 35 pounds — and he's right.

Wild animals raised in captivity can seldom be successfully returned to the wilds, presenting their owners with the problem of what to do with an unmanageable adult fox, raccoon, skunk or deer. Often the animal must be destroyed, since it is almost impossible to get soon to accept wild pets.

Then there's the problem of disease. Wild animals can carry and transmit to man several diseases, the most serious of which is rabies. Often, an animal woods probably has an anxious mother waiting nearby, but she will not show herself while a human is in the vicinity.

And if the animal does survive past infancy, other problems arise. Unlike dogs or cats, which have been domesticated for centuries, wild animals seldom lose their "wild" nature. An adult deer, particularly a buck, can be extremely dangerous and a raccoon, even one raised in the house, starts thinking he can whip anybody in the family when he gets to weigh about 35 pounds — and he's right.

Wild animals raised in captivity can seldom be successfully returned to the wilds, presenting their owners with the problem of what to do with an unmanageable adult fox, raccoon, skunk or deer. Often the animal must be destroyed, since it is almost impossible to get soon to accept wild pets.

Then there's the problem of disease. Wild animals can carry and transmit to man several diseases, the most serious of which is rabies. Often, an animal which allows itself to be captured is diseased. Any animal which does not show a normal fear of man or displays signs of distress should be left strictly alone.

Skunks and rabies

Skunks are particularly dangerous, since they can carry the rabies virus for six to eight months before symptoms appear. Even a skunk bought from a pet store and certified disease-free could develop rabies months after it is purchased.

What the County Extension means to me

by Stanley Alexander

I think the first thing I remember about Extension was the story about the farmer when the first county agent was hired here. The farmer said, "That young fellow can't tell me how to farm, because I've already worn out three farms."

Extension and 4-H has definitely shaped Nicholas County — at the beginning by convincing farmers to use fertilizers and lime; also, by bringing in fescue for pasture a:c1 by introducing varieties of tobacco resistant to disease.

Field days were held at various farms across the county so the general public could see the results of the different practices. Nicholas County Extension has worked closely with Soil Conservation Service and A.S.C.S. for the benefit of the farmers of Nicholas County.

The 4-H program has probably done more for the youth of Nicholas County than any other organization. The role of Extension in our county educational system is seen clearly through the 4-H program. The forming of local 4-H clubs educates young people very early in the parliamentary laws and the way our democratic system functions. Officers are elected and problems and items of business are worked out by the voting process and majority rule. Also, the students learn valuable skills such as woodworking, tobacco and beef cattle programs. They take pride in exhibiting their projects in local fairs and contests, with the chance to go to regional and state competition.

The home demonstration part of Extension has helped the homemakers of the county in many ways. Some of these ways include the leadership of the home demonstration agents, instructing in such practices as crafts, cooking, sewing and management of household finances. Due to the present economic conditions we as farmers and homemakers of Nicholas County need help now more than ever before.

I guess Extension is kind of like the county fire department, and the county ambulance service. We don't think much about them until we need them. At that time we are very thankful they are there and available in our time of need.

START COLLEGE IN TWO YEARS WITH MORE THAN $15,000.

How many employers today can guarantee you work for two years, let alone offer you a bonus for college? Today's Army will do both.

In fact, if you join the Army for two years, you could accumulate more than $15,000 for school.

Here's How: if you participate in the Veterans' Educational Assistance Program (VEAP), the government will match the savings you save twelve-to-one for a maximum of $5,000. Then, if you qualify, the Army will add on an $8,000 educational bonus. That's $13,000 in just two years.
