Charles Cox appointed GS Fund Drive chairman

Martha Layne Collins, Lieutenant Governor of Kentucky, announces the appointment of Charles Cox as Girl Scout Fund Drive Chairman in Nicholas County. Mr. Cox attended the kick-off luncheon at the Holiday Inn in Frankfort on Aug. 15 to receive his appointment, and to help make plans for the fall campaign.

Girl scouting is a girl-centered organization that is an integral part of the community. It is a sharing among youth and adult volunteers of an informal education process based on proven ethical values that help expand a girl's horizon.

The money raised from the fund drives is used to provide professional support to volunteers, to pay for program materials, and to provide training and educational opportunities for the adults who are leading our girls.

Kaye Schneider, field director for this area, works with volunteers to see that troops are maintained, and that every girl is given the opportunity to participate in girl scouting.

Kay's Kitchen

By Kay Fisher

First let me assure you I do not mind one bit requests for certain recipes. In fact I am always glad to get requests, and only hope I can answer them. Sometimes I am standing in the middle of the kitchen wondering just what to write about for the coming week, or at my typewriter for words to come from my fingertips. This week it is easy. Several have wanted recipes using rice. Seems it is not the favorite dish of many people; however, it is one of my favorites. I serve it as a change from potatoes. And I have a sure way of cooking it.

HOW TO COOK RICE

Put 1 cup uncooked rice, 1½ cups cold water, and ½ to 1 teaspoon salt in a 2-quart heavy saucepan; cover with tight-fitting lid. Bring to vigorous boil, then turn heat as low as possible. Continue cooking 30 minutes. DO NOT STIR OR LIFT LID.

Turn off heat; let rice steam, covered, for an additional 10 minutes. Makes three cups cooked rice. Fluff with fork to dry rice.

Serve topped with butter, sprinkle with parsley, or topped with gravy.

And with cooked rice you make other dishes calling for cooked rice.

This week we will stay with rice as a vegetable, and go to rice as a dessert later.

HERB RICE

2 tablespoons butter
1 cup chopped onion
1 cup uncooked rice
1 teaspoon rosemary
½ teaspoon marjoram
½ teaspoon salt
2 bouillon cubes
2 cups water

Melt butter or margarine in 2-quart heavy saucepan. Add onion and rice. Cook until onion turns yellow and rice begins to brown. Add other ingredients. Bring to vigorous boil, stirring to dissolve bouillon cubes. Turn heat low as possible, cover and leave over low heat about 20 minutes until liquid is absorbed. Remove from heat, but leave covered about 10 minutes.

Diced water chestnuts and drained sliced mushrooms may be added at cooking time if desired.

CAJUN RICE

1½ cups hot cooked rice
2 tablespoons mayonnaise
½ cup minced onion
½ cup minced celery
¼ cup minced green pepper
12 slices crisp cooked bacon, crumbled
3 hard-cooked eggs, chopped
½ cup minced parsley
½ cup sliced green onion tops
1 4-oz. can sliced mushrooms, drained
1 small jar pimento strips, drained

Fry bacon until crisp, then drain off any fat, and crumble. Remove most of fat, then saute onions, green peppers, celery, drained mushrooms and pimento until wilted. Combine all ingredients and toss lightly. Place in casserole and bake in oven at 350 degrees until hot.

FRUITED RICE

¼ cup butter or margarine
3 cups hot cooked rice
1 cup cubed cooked ham
1 cup cubed cooked chicken
1 cup pineapple chunks, drained
1 cup thinly sliced green pepper
½ cup sliced water chestnuts
¼ teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons soy sauce
¼ teaspoon garlic powder
1 teaspoon onion powder

Stir butter into hot rice; add remaining ingredients, mixing well. Spoon rice mixture into a lightly greased 2-quart casserole. Cover and bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes. Serves six to eight.

Question: Why is there so much confusion in religion?

Answer: Most confusion can be traced to these sources: Miss Information, Miss Interpretation, Miss Representation, Miss Construction, Miss Conception, and Miss Understanding. I call these the daughters of the devil. John 5:39, tells us we should, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life."

State's Homemakers fight cancer through research fund

Eight years ago, when Virginia McCandless became ill with ovarian cancer, she underwent surgery and chemotherapy, the usual methods of fighting the disease.

But Mrs. McCandless wanted to do more. So with the help of her doctor and more than 31,000 Kentucky women, the Barren County resident began a new battle — the Ovarian Cancer Research Fund.

Mrs. McCandless was the state health chairwoman of the Kentucky Extension Homemakers, a statewide association coordinated by the Kentucky Cooperative Extension Service and home economics agents in every county. To raise money to find the cause and cure of ovarian cancer, she enlisted the help of fellow homemakers throughout the state.

Their goal at the start was to raise $1 per member for a total of $31,000 to be donated for research at the Albert B. Chandler Medical Center at the University of Kentucky. They reached that goal in four years.

Mrs. McCandless did not survive her battle with ovarian cancer; she died in 1981. But her project not only has continued but has thrived under the sponsorship of the state's homemakers, now numbering 36,000.

Since 1977, they have raised more than $70,000, most of it coming from personal donations of $1 per member per year. They also have collected aluminum cans for recycling, held style shows, and asked for donations from individuals and businesses.

"The homemakers should really be proud of their combined effort," said Dr. John van Nagell, a gynecologic cancer surgeon at the UK Medical Center who was Mrs. McCandless's physician. "This research fund has been their project. We all feel not only their financial support, but also their moral support and interest."

"It's incredible to think that most of their money has been raised by their giving a dollar apiece."

The money has helped fund a new ovarian cancer research laboratory, which opened last year at the UK medical center. It also has helped van Nagell and Dr. Edward Pavlik, director of the research laboratory, to purchase supplies, equipment, drugs and other materials.

The medical center's ovarian cancer research, said van Nagell, focuses on determining the best chemotherapy treatment program for patients. The equipment in the new laboratory helps the researchers measure substances produced by ovarian tumors and predict the response of the tumors to therapy. Researchers at the medical center also have made significant advances in "in vitro" chemotherapy testing, which involves removing tumor cells during surgery, growing them outside the body in tissue cultures, and exposing them to a variety of chemo-therapeutic agents.

"We are trying to determine the sensitivity of individual tumors to chemotherapy agents," said van Nagell. "This way, we can match the most appropriate drug to the patient, and maximize the chance of curing the patient. We can predict which drugs won't work, and spare the patient the toxicity of taking those drugs." Van Nagell hopes that this research may eventually be applied to other types of cancer as well.

This year, the center has been studying the use of hormonal therapy in patients with ovarian cancer. "We have tried to determine the sensitivity of ovarian tumors to high doses of specific hormones," said van Nagell. One of the benefits of hormonal therapy, he added, is that it has few side effects.

"The homemakers' money allows us to extend our research into areas where it would otherwise be impossible," van Nagell said. "Just as important, it helps us to educate women about ovarian cancer."

With lectures invited by the UK medical center and a slide program, the homemakers have made presentations about ovarian cancer to more than 30,000 Kentucky women at state homemakers meetings and to others at health fairs in several counties. They have assembled and distributed health packets to their members, and plan to work with van Nagell and their state Extension health advisor, Cathy Peterjohn, to make a video tape or television program to spread information about the disease even further.

Van Nagell and the homemakers stress the importance of early detection of ovarian cancer, the fourth leading cause of cancer deaths in women. This year, it is estimated that more than 16,000 cases of ovarian cancer will be diagnosed in the United States, and that more than 12,000 women will die of this disease.

"One of the problems with detecting ovarian cancer is that it produces no early symptoms," van Nagell said. "Women often have advanced ovarian cancer at the time of their first consultation with a physician. This is why a yearly pelvic examination is so important."

The most common symptoms of ovarian cancer are a feeling of bloating, increasing abdominal size, and pelvic pressure. Most ovarian cancers are treated with a combination of surgery and chemotherapy.

Kentucky Extension Homemakers have been honored nationally for their work. They twice have received the Elin Anderson Health Award, a national Extension Homemakers Award for health projects.

They also have established several state awards as fundraising incentives. This year, 41 county Homemaker organizations received certificates at the state homemakers meeting for having all members give a dollar to the research fund. The Boyd County Homemakers received the plaque that goes each year to the county raising the most money for the fund. The homemakers also have planned a new award for the county that collects the most money from businesses and non-homemaker individuals.

"The homemakers raised almost $20,000 this year — the most ever," said Cathy Peterjohn, the homemakers' Extension state health advisor. "Close to $1,000 of that check came from 19 counties that held aluminum can drives. This year also more homemakers had the opportunity to visit the research laboratory and see the results of their work. The homemakers plan to continue to support this project indefinitely, with hopes of improved treatment for ovarian cancer and maybe a cure."

If your air conditioner can't take the heat anymore . . .

replace it with an ADD-ON Heat Pump.

If you're about to add or replace a central air conditioner, do it with an ADD-ON Heat Pump — for year-round efficiency.

The ADD-ON Heat Pump is a close relative of the central air conditioner and can be added to your present gas, oil or electric heating system. In summer you get economical cooling, and in winter, it provides up to three units of heat for every unit of energy it uses. That's efficiency.

Forecasters predict continuing rising energy costs. Replace that worn-out air conditioner with an ADD-ON Heat Pump to save energy and money. It's The Wise Choice . . . now and in the future.
