Reese Smoot, Judge/Executive

Police on lookout for drunk drivers

Gov. Martha Layne Collins made a plea this week that motorists throughout Kentucky "be extra careful on the highways over the coming holiday season."

"At a time like this, when families throughout our Commonwealth are gathering to renew old times and celebrate what ought to be the happiest of occasions, I can't think of a more terrible happenstance than to suddenly be confronted by a police officer, at your door, bearing the news that a loved one has just been killed on the way home," she said.

THE GOVERNOR said that one of her first official acts, since taking office as Kentucky's chief executive earlier this week, was to personally ask state police to mobilize all the resources and manpower at their disposal to prevent a repeat of the high traffic death toll reported over Christmas and New Year's 1982. Last year, 16 persons were killed in accidents over those two holiday periods.

And of those 16, Collins said, nine were alcohol-involved.

"Not only am I appalled that drunk drivers account for half of all the fatalities currently being reported in this country," she said, "but, as a mother, the statistics really hit home when you're told that the alcohol-involved crash is the leading cause of death for young Americans between the ages of 16 and 24."

Collins' remarks are supported by a Kentucky State Police study describing the typical driver in a fatal Kentucky accident as being between 16 and 24 and attributing the cause of the crash to drinking and speeding.

STATE POLICE said that their patrols over Christmas and New Year's will be instructed to be particularly alert for both the drinking and speeding driver.

One of the tactics they will use to spot the drinking driver is the safety checkpoint where motorists are stopped for license checks. Drivers on the road during peak traffic periods, and traveling through areas where the past fatal accident experience has been high, can expect to see troopers stopping vehicles and checking the drivers, they said.

The air patrol also will be used and, according to KSP Deputy Commissioner Morgan T. Elkins, it has proven to be a highly effective tool in spotting both speeders and other drivers under the influence of alcohol.

ELKINS also urged anyone seeing a driver on the road who appears to be intoxicated to call state police via their toll-free ACTION HAP-ID hotline. The number is 1-800-223-5555, and callers are not required to give their name. "All we need is a description of the suspect vehicle, including its license number and the direction in which it is headed," he said.
