Some business related expenses tax deductible

Many taxpayers who have business-related travel, transportation, entertainment, and gifts may find they are able to deduct these expenses on their tax return. The following questions and answers provided by the Internal Revenue Service deal with these business expenses.

Q. Who may deduct travel, transportation, entertainment and gift expenses?

A. Those entitled to a deduction would be salaried or self-employed workers who must incur these expenses as an ordinary and necessary part of performing their jobs. Outside salesmen and others whose income or duties depend on interacting with business clients would be included.

Q. What forms would I fill out to claim these deductions?

A. You would start by filing Form 1040. To deduct business travel and transportation complete Form 2106, Employee Business Expenses, and enter the amount from 2106 on Line 34, Form 1040. Generally, you may deduct your qualifying entertainment and gifts as a Miscellaneous Deduction on Schedule A. However, outside salespersons include these expenses on Form 2106.

Q. What if I free-lance and work on my own?

A. If you are self-employed, you would report your income and expenses on Schedule C, Profit or (Loss) form Business or Profession. On Part II of the form, all business expenses would be entered, including travel, transportation, entertainment and gifts. File this form along with your 1040.

Q. I report my expenses to my employer who then reimburses me. How do I report this?

Q. It depends on how much is reimbursed. If your employer requires you to account for all your business expenses directly and then reimburses you fully on the amount you submit, no reporting is necessary on your tax return. If you are partially reimbursed, these payments must be used to offset any business expenses you claim. Excess reimbursement must be included as income on your tax return.

Q. What proof is required for these expenses?

A. Timely-kept entries in a diary, appointment book, or similar record are needed. Entries must include the date, location and business purpose of the travel or entertainment, along with who was seen, and what was spent. Keep a receipt or similar supporting evidence for all lodging expenses and any other expense of $25 or more.

Q. What travel and transportation expenses are deductible?

A. The ordinary and necessary expenses of local transportation are deductible. Most common are expenses of driving and maintaining your car while on business. If you go on a trip outside the area of your main place of business, your temporary living expenses, such as food and lodging costs, are deductible.

Q. How do I deduct my auto for business use?

A. You may use actual cost or the standard mileage rate. If you use actual cost, generally, you must figure out a percentage based on the miles that you use your car for business. Do not include commuting or personal mileage. You would then multiply this percentage by the total annual cost of running your car (which includes gas, oil, insurance, repairs and depreciation). If you use the standard mileage rate, you may take 20.5 cents per mile for the first 15,000 business miles. Take 11 cents per mile for business mileage over 15,000 miles or if your car is fully depreciated.

Q. What meals may I claim while doing business locally?

A. The cost of business-related entertainment, including meals, may be deductible if directly related to, or associated with, the active pursuit of your business. Personal dining or taking turns picking up your business acquaintance's check when no business purposes are served, are not deductible expenses.

Q. Are there any limits to the amount of business gifts that I can deduct?

A. Generally, you cannot deduct more than $25 for business gifts you give to any one individual during the year. Incidental costs, such as engraving or packaging, which do not add substantial value are not included in the $25. You may also give any item that costs $4 or less on which your name is imprinted and which you distribute generally.

Q. How long should I keep my records and receipts?

A. You must keep proof to support your deductions as long as your income tax return can be examined. Generally, this is three years from the date your tax return is filed.

Q. Where can I find out more information on these business expenses?

A. Complete information can be found in free IRS Publication 463, "Travel, Entertainment and Gift Expenses." You may obtain it by writing the IRS Tax Forms Distribution Center at P.O. Box 636, Florence, Ky. 41042.

Imported leaf threatens price support program

The problems posed by rapidly rising tobacco imports must be solved, according to Kentucky Farm Bureau President Ray Mackey, or the tobacco price support program "as we know it" may not survive.

Mackey made the observation in his annual address to the Kentucky Farm Bureau convention delegates meeting in Lexington.

Mackey said the current burley market, which is seeing sizeable increases of unsold leaf go into price stocks even though drought cut the crop by almost half, is ample evidence that imports are threatening the tobacco program.

The statement by the Farm Bureau chief is the latest in a series of public criticisms he has leveled at the flood of foreign-grown tobacco being purchased by U.S. cigarette companies.

EARLIER in the week, he asked a federal task force which is investigating the problem to visit Kentucky burley markets and attend an upcoming quota hearing. He said such a visit would help the group understand the severity of the import threat to domestic growers.

The investigation is being conducted under a new federal law which authorizes the secretary of agriculture to limit tobacco imports if he finds they are interfering with the operation of the price support program.

The investigation was triggered by the current tobacco price support freeze, and by the fact that more than 20 percent of last year's crop was turned down by cigarette manufacturers, and sent into the surplus pool.

In his convention address, Mackey was critical of the current price support freeze, blaming it on "the enemies of tobacco; in combination with a desire by trade for cheaper leaf."

He said the freeze and other price support limitations imposed over the past two years, have reduced this year's support levels by more than 18 cents. If the freeze were continued through 1985, he noted, supports would be 38 cents lower than their legally mandated level.

TOBACCO BUYERS seem to want even further price concessions by growers, Mackey warned, which would leave a "thin line between profit and loss."

He called on the non-farm segments of the industry, including warehouse interests, leaf dealers and tobacco companies, to support efforts to preserve the tobacco program. These other tobacco interests have "benefited as much or more than farmers" from the program for more than 40 years, he said.

In other remarks to the convention, Mackey said farmers should be alert to any efforts by the 1984 Kentucky legislature to raise taxes. He said Farm Bureau would strongly oppose any move to eliminate sales tax exemptions on farm production items, or to raise cigarette taxes.

He said even a small increase in Kentucky's three-cent-per-pack tax on cigarettes could harm the tobacco industry, as other states might "follow our lead and further increase their taxes."

The final effect of a hike would be reduced sales, he added, "resulting in a corresponding reduced demand for tobacco, followed by a loss of income to producers."

New bass size limit proposed at two lakes

"14-1" bass size limit proposed for Barkley and Kentucky lakes

Bass fishermen at both Kentucky and Barkley lakes will be observing a new — and eventually different — size limit sometime next year.

At its Dec. 5 meeting, the Fish and Wildlife Commission approved a regulation calling for a "14-1" bass size limit on both Kentucky and Barkley lakes. Under the provisions of the regulation, the minimum size limit would be 14 inches, but a fisherman would be allowed to keep one fish under the minimum size.

It will take at least one month, and possibly longer, for this proposed regulation to become law.

THE COMMISSION'S action came as a response to a public hearing on a proposed increase of the bass size limit on Kentucky Lake to 15 inches. The majority of those commenting on this proposed change felt that both Barkley and Kentucky lakes should be included in any size limit change, and many felt that a straight 15 inch limit was too restrictive.

New president

Caudill newly elected president of the K.C.S.

Jerry W. Caudill, D.M.D. of Flemingsburg, is the newly-elected president of the Kentucky Craniomandibular Society.

This society is comprised of oral surgeons and general dentists throughout the state that diagnose and treat craniomandibular disorders. Membership in this society is limited, due to the complex nature of diagnosis and treatment in this field.

New members are required to be general dentists who have received a minimum of 200 hours of advanced continuing education in the fields of orthodontics and temporomandibular joint (TMJ) dysfunction or board certified oral surgeons.

Disorders are many and can vary from simple popping, clicking or grating of the jaw joint to severe head, neck and shoulder pain that can even mimic sinus or migraine headaches. Some patients also report locking of the jaws, pain behind the eyes, ringing or buzzing in the ears and dizziness or light headedness. It is this ability of TMJ dysfunction to mimic so many other diseases or problems that has earned it the title of "The Great Imposter."

The typical TMJ patient is between 20 and 50 years old and may be male or female, but usually female. They often have already seen several doctors and specialists and have had a multitude of tests including EEGs, EEGs, EMGs, CAT scans, blood-tests, eye tests and finally, when nothing can be found, a sign-off for "psychosomatic" ailments. Some have even been told they must simply learn to live with their pain.

Dr. Caudill noted that the causes of TMJ dysfunction include trauma, infection, etc. but is usually due to insufficient jaw growth and/or malocclusion (bad bite).

According to Dr. Gerald Smernoff, the occlusion or bite may not be in harmony with the way muscles and jaw joints are supposed to relate. If the teeth do not move and adjust to the muscles and joints, then the muscles are overworked and go into spasms.

Treatments for these disorders are as varied as their causes. According to Dr. Caudill, treatments may include transcutaneous electro neural stimulation (TENS), orthopedic repositioning of the jaw to its proper position, orthodontic braces or as a last resort jaw joint surgery or oral surgeon.

Dr. Caudill was quick to point out that all the 65 million people in the United States that suffer from chronic headaches have TMJ dysfunction syndrome. However, when they do and proper treatment is instituted the results can be both dramatic and gratifying. TMJ dysfunction is a problem best addressed by a professional who has been trained in the function relationship of teeth, muscle and bones. A dentist such as a member of the Kentucky Craniomandibular Society, can determine whether or not the bite is in harmony with the rest of the system. When Dr. Caudill performs an evaluation and no TMJ dysfunction is discovered, that patient is then referred to the family physician for further investigation.

Dr. Caudill's office is located in the Medical Arts Building on Elizaville Road in Flemingsburg. Should you have any qustions concerning Craniomandibular Disorders you may contact Dr. Caudill at 845-7231.
