Winter trout stocking starts

by John Wilson

The coldest weather of the season (so far) rolled in during the third week of January, just as fisheries' crews began the 1983 trout stocking program.

Although the monthly stockings of streams and tailwaters won't get underway until late March or early April, several lakes around Kentucky are stocked with trout during January and February.

There's a good biological reason for this early stocking. Trout are cold water fish and will remain active in water temperatures that send warm water species into cold hibernation. So when trout are stocked in a lake with existing predator fish populations, the predators aren't too interested in an easy trout dinner.

By the time the water warms up enough in the spring for largemouth bass and other large predator fish to become active, the trout have dispersed, have become used to their new surroundings and are no longer an easy meal.

This will mark the second year that Lake Cumberland has received trout. Cumberland, which once supported good populations of rainbow trout, lost much of its trout habitat when extended reservoir work on the dam forced a severe drawndown of water levels.

Now, with the lake operating normally again, biologists are attempting to restore trout fishing to Cumberland. Last year's stocking of 100,000 trout will be matched with an equal number of 10-inch rainbows this winter.

There didn't seem to be much trout fishing going on at Cumberland last year, according to Jim Axon, assistant director of fisheries for the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. Axon thinks the primary problem is that anglers haven't discovered that there are trout in the lake once more.

Other lakes scheduled to be stocked this winter are Laurel, which will receive 65,000 trout, Stanford (1,000 trout) and Woods Creek (7,000 fish). Several other small lakes around the state get trout in April, May and October.

Another experimental trout stocking will get into high gear this season with the introduction of 5,000 eight-inch brown trout into the Cumberland tailwaters. Browns are much more difficult to catch than rainbow trout and they grow faster. This combination should produce a fishery for five to 10 pound trout below Cumberland Lake, Axon says.

Approximately 1,500 brown trout were stocked in the Cumberland tailwaters last year. Biologists wanted to stock 5,000 then, but couldn't find a source of supply. But it looks like the supply problem has been solved this year and the stocking should proceed as scheduled.

Although brown trout aren't native to Kentucky, the creation of deep lakes with cold water discharges produces good trout habitat. Native warm-water fish, such as bass or crappie, have trouble existing in these cold tailwaters, and stocking trout represents a way to restore sport fishing to these areas.

If all of this has inspired you to try a little winter trout fishing, remember that you will need a valid trout stamp in addition to that new 1983 fishing or combination hunting and fishing license.

Big tractor pull Feb. 16

They look like farm trucks and tractors with pinstriping and fenders.

They're customized, personalized, and most of all, powered.

They're big, they're loud and they flex engine biceps that measure their horsepower by the hundreds.

They go by names like "Mello Yello," "The Kentuckian" and "Sassey Massey."

They have fan magazines and cross-country circuits and posters.

And they have a following that are just as loyal as New York Yankee fans, and just as willing to easy enough to spot them in tie crowd in Freedom Hall. All you have to do is check out the color of cap they're wearing — Ford blue, Deere green, Allis orange, bright red International Harvester and the rest.

The 300 or so pickup trucks and tractors at the Championship Tractor Pulls are good allright. The machines and their drivers were hand-picked by the Kentucky Tractor Pullers Association to pull in Louisville.

Drivers will be trucking in from 19 states and Canada to pull in one of 15 different classes. There will be a 6:30 p.m. evening performance each night of the farm show, Feb. 16-19, and a 1 p.m. afternoon pull on Saturday, Feb. 19.

And the object of it all, as any tractor pull afficionado from small town Fourth of July pulls on can tell you, is simple.

All you have to do is have a seat on top of a thousand horsepower mechanical beast, rev up and pull a weight sled as far as you can down a dirt track. The tens of thousands of pounds of drag on the sled, the incredible strain on the engine and the driver's own split-second reflexes determine how far that journey will be.

Each of the 15 classes are different, either by weight, style of engine or modification. There will be stocks, which look most like what Gramps used to drive on "Lassie," to super modifieds, which look a lot more like the X-wing fighters in "Star Wars." In between are two and four-wheel drive truck classes, super stock tractors, and mini-rods, another exotic breed which looks like a beefed-up hybrid of a lawn and garden tractor.

Another feature about the Championship Tractor Pulls is that there are no elimination pulls. There is a point system used in each performance. Whoever pulls farthest in each class wins his event.

What will he win? First-place finishers who drive the larger machines may go home with over $2,000, maybe enough to pay the way to Louisville and back, with some change left over. Total prize money will be over $100,000.

The Pulls have become so popular that they've built a "tough ticket" reputation as being sold out. Not so.

To date, all performances still have reserved seats available.

Evening performances are $10 and $9. The afternoon pulls on Saturday cost $9 and $8.

NEW MAYSVILLE HOSPITAL OPENS

Meadowview Regional Hospital at Maysville opened its doors at 7 a.m. Wednesday, Feb. 9.

Midway College horse show team rode to first place

A Woodford County woman tied for high point rider recently when the Midway College horse show team rode to a first-place finish in two Intercollegiate Horse Show Association events at Lake Erie College, Painesville, Ohio.

Bethany Adams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Larry Neider of Route 4, Gaylord Way, won first-place in two classes — intermediate on the flat and intermediate over fences. She is a freshman majoring in equine office administration.

Her scores boosted Midway's point accumulation to 120, the highest of the two-day meet. She tied with another Midway rider, Elizabeth Stokes of Huntsville, Ala. Ms. Adams' performance qualified her to compete in the IHSA regionals April 16 at Purdue University.

The next IHSA horse show will be Feb. 26 at Morehead University.

Other colleges which competed were Purdue University, Morehead University, the University of Kentucky, Michigan State University, Kenyon College (Gambier, Ohio), Salem College (Salem, W.Va.), Ball State University (Muncie, Ind.), Otterbein College (Westerville, Ohio), Earlham College (Richmond, Ind.), and Lake Erie College.

Another Woodford County student, Chris Wright of Woodspring Farm on McCowans Ferry Road, qualified earlier for regionals.

Midway has won the regional competition the past two years and has placed third and fifth both years in national finals.

HEARING SET ON MILK ORDERS

Dairy farmers, milk handlers, consumers and others may testify Feb. 15 at a U.S. Department of Agriculture public hearing on proposed amendments to the Louisville-Lexington-Evansville federal milk marketing order.

The hearing will begin at 9:30 a.m. at the Executive West Motor Hotel, Freedom Way, at the fairgrounds at Louisville.

The proposed amendments would replace the present "take-out pay-back" payment plan by Sept. 1 with a seasonal base-excess plan to pay producers for their milk.
