USDA official explains crop certification

USDA's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service has asked producers to certify their farm program acreage. Matthew Kennedy, chairman of the Nicholas County ASC committee, explained the reasons for the acreage report and reviewed the certification process. "Certification is the opportunity we give the farmers to report to us the acreage of crops planted on their farms to determine whether they are eligible to receive the different benefits under the program we offer," he said. "When the farmer reports to the county ASCS office, he/she can review the aerial photograph of his/her farm and pinpoint the fields in which the crops are grown. This information is then recorded and the report serves as documentation for crop acreage bases and program compliance. Mr. Kennedy said certification is particularly important to producers of quota crops. In addition to these crops, all other crop acreages must be reported. These include corn, wheat, barley, grain sorghum, oats and soybeans.

Crop news

Agicultural news
Open weather throughout most of the week allowed many farmers to work in the early morning hours planting corn where fields had dried sufficiently. Tobacco setting, soybean planting and haying were also common activities. Rainfall in the week hampered fieldwork somewhat, but a beautiful, sunny and warm weekend followed. An average of 4.1 days were favorable for fieldwork. Soil moisture across Kentucky was 37 percent adequate and 63 percent surplus.

Planting advanced to 94 percent complete compared to 86 percent last year and 42 percent for the average. As of June 3 planting progress is the best on record. Approximately three percent of the planted acreage has emerged. Barley setting was 78 percent complete compared to 66 percent a year ago and an average of 62 percent. The purchase area and counties with considerable early bottom acreage continue to lag the rest of the state. Approximately 60 percent of the planted acreage has emerged. The overall crop is currently rating in poor to fair condition and whether the remaining intended corn acreage will actually be planted is now remains to be seen. Some fields were replanted during the week.

Soil surveys presented by conservation district

The Nicholas County Conservation District held a public meeting recently to present to the public the soil surveys of Nicholas County. Lowell Hollar, chairman of the Nicholas County Board of Supervisors, presented the meeting. Mr. Hollar commented that a better understanding of our soils and their properties can generate a sound conservative attitude toward preserving one of our greatest natural resources.

A slide show was presented on how to use the survey. Glen Kelly, State Soil Scientist from Lexington, described to the public the different information contained in the survey. Such things as engineering properties, yield per acre of cropland and pastures, recreational development, building site development, sanitary facilities construction material, and the general description and capabilities of all the soils in Nicholas County.

Kelly also stated that the survey will be around for a long time because the general properties of the soil will not change far over a period of time. However, there will be times when certain areas will need to be updated due to gross erosion occurring or maybe more detailed mapping needs to be done for certain projects.

Anyone wanting to obtain a soil survey may contact the Soil Conservation Service located at the old Army building on East Main Street.
