Relief is in sight

After weeks of dusty streets in Carlisle, caused by no rain and the gas line construction, relief is in sight according to City Superintendent Gayle Vanlandingham. "The construction company should be done with the two inch lines in about two weeks and they have already started to clean up." Vanlandingham said the individual residential hookups were still to be done this summer but not much mess was expected from that. He said the project was two months ahead of schedule. — Mercury photo.
