Nicholas soil survey published

Are you interested in buying a farm or maybe wanting to build a house and want to know the different soil types of a particular area? Anyone interested in the behavior and limitations of a particular soil can have access to this information by obtaining a soil survey.

The Nicholas County Soil Conservation District in cooperation with the U.S. Soil Conservation Service will have an open meeting at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, May 26, at the Carlisle courthouse to present to the public the published soil survey of Nicholas and Bourbon counties.

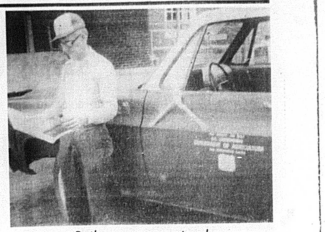
The soil survey contains information that can help land users and planners to better understand soil properties, behavior, limitations and hazards.

Soil properties described in the survey describes whether a particular soil has a tendency to be wet, well drained, subject to flooding or shallow to bedrock. This and other information can assist farmers, builders, engineers and others interested in selecting the site for a particular practice to insure good land management and getting the maximum benefit from a particular land use.

A combined effort of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, federal, state and local agencies assisted in the publication of the soil survey.

The fieldwork for the survey was performed during the period of 1968-1977. Soil scientists made the survey by taking profiles of the different soils and recording their characteristics. Each soil is described in the survey.

Anyone interested in obtaining more information on the meeting or the survey may contact the Soil Conservation Service office located at the old Armory building.



Soil survey examined

Edgar A. Darrell, supervisor of the Nicholas County Conservation District, inspects the published soil survey for Nicholas and Bourbon counties. An open meeting will be held at the courthouse Thursday, May 26, at 7:30 p.m., on soil types. (See story elsewhere.) — Photo submitted.

Easter Seal's Camp Kysoc to operate again

With some financial backing from the Rotary Clubs in the Commonwealth, the Kentucky Easter Seal Society will again be operating Camp Kysoc, a summer residential camping facility for the physically disabled. A full camping session at the 124 acre site near Carrollton will be held July 24 through 29.

The Easter Seal Society first offered camping for the handicapped at Kysoc in 1961. The Society later expanded its camping program when it developed Camp Green Shores, located on Rough River Lake near McDaniels. Each camp is specially designed to accommodate physically handicapped persons.

Two years ago, the Society was faced with the grim possibility of closing one of the camps due to losses in operational revenue for the camping program. Although primary camping activities for the handicapped were centered at Camp Green Shores, limited activities were maintained at Kysoc during this period by leasing the camp and providing some of the staff for groups such as the American Diabetes Association, McDowell Cancer Network and several others. "Kentucky Rotarians have long been supportive of the Society's service programs for the handicapped," according to Guion Miller, executive director of the Easter Seal Society. "In fact, the Society owes its origins to Rotary leaders who were instrumental in forming the Kentucky Society for Crippled Children in 1922."

Grants available for artists

The Kentucky Arts Council announces a new grant program for individual artists living in Kentucky. Up to seven fellowships for $5,000 each will be awarded each year. Visual artists (painters, sculptors, printmakers, craftspeople, photographers, etc.) and film and video artists are eligible to apply by the July 8 deadline this year. Writers, composers, librettists and choreographers may apply in 1984.

Those wishing information on applying for fellowships should contact the Kentucky Arts Council, Berry Hill, Frankfort, KY 40601; 502-564-3757.
