Unemployment falls slightly in Kentucky

Kentucky's unemployment rate fell again in April, and for the first time this year the number of unemployed Kentuckians has declined near the figure for the corresponding month of 1982.

Figures compiled by the Cabinet for Human Resources show the state jobless rate for April declined 0.7 percent, falling from 11.7 percent in March to 11.0 percent. The 11.0 percent unemployment rate is the lowest in five months, since a rate of 10.8 percent was recorded last November. The April figure correlates to the national, nonseasonally adjusted rate of 10.0 percent. In April 1982 Kentucky's unemployment rate was 10.5 percent.

State labor market analyst Ed Blackwell of the Department for Manpower Services points out that the number of unemployed Kentuckians decreased in April by 1,900. There were 194,200 Kentuckians unemployed in March, compared to 182,300 in April. The latter figure is within 6,500 of the total unemployed in April 1982, when the number was 175,800. Blackwell said, "The projection for May is a further increase in employment, so we should see the figures on total unemployment come even closer to the 1982 numbers before the beginning of summer." Summertime brings an influx of job-seeking students to the labor market and normally results in a temporary slowdown in improving employment figures."

Total employment increased from 1,460,400 in March to 1,470,200 in April. This increase of nearly 10,000 was caused by major employment gains in the agriculture, manufacturing, service and trade industries. Blackwell said, "In the service industries, employment gains were posted in amusement and recreation, automotive repair, lodging places, and miscellaneous personal services such as tax return preparations firms. In the trade sector the big gainers were building material and hardware dealers, eating and drinking establishments, furniture, home furnishing and equipment stores, and grocery stores."

In April Kentucky's civilian labor force was 1,652,500, down 2,100 from 1,654,600 in March and down 22,100 from 1,675,600 in April 1982. The civilian labor force includes only persons currently employed and those unemployed who are actively seeking jobs.

Exact name is important, says VA

At the turn of the century a popular song was "My Name is Morgan (But It Ain't J.P.)." The song went on to tell about a young girl who mistakenly thought her boyfriend was one of the world's richest men.

Eighty years later and in the computer age, the Veterans Administration occasionally has problems with names too.

The Morgans aren't big problems, but others are. VA computers have the names of over 304,000 Smiths, 202,000 Johnsons, 149,000 Williamses a n d 144,000 Jones. The agency even lists 50 Ronald Reagans and over 100 Harry Walters (he's the new VA Administrator).

These names become a problem when one of these ex-GIs write to the VA and doesn't include the all-important military serial number, social security number or VA claim number.

It isn't necessarily impossible to locate a veteran's file without these numbers, but with over 34 million names of former servicemen and women in VA files, including the number will simplify things and expedite an answer for the veteran.

Kentucky forests lose 25,000 acres to fires

During this spring's forest-fire season, approximately 25,589 acres of Kentucky's forests were damaged or destroyed by wildfires, Division of Forestry Director Donald A. Hamm reported.

Hamm said that 1,296 forest fires caused the forest losses. "While the loss this year is less than that which we experienced last year, it's still too high," he said. "The future loss of income to the state's economy for each acre burned has been estimated at $2,029. Based on this figure, the loss from this spring's fires was more than $52 million," Hamm stated.

State Forestry officials credited three factors with helping hold down the number of fires and burned acreage this spring. "The first thing which helped us was a spring with very favorable weather conditions," Hamm explained. "The frequent periods of rain we had this spring kept the fuels on the forest floor from drying out completely. This made it easier for us to control the fires which did start."

The second factor helping keep fire totals down was an increased fire-prevention effort in areas of the state with historically high fire occurrence. "Personal contact with local residents was emphasized by the Division of Forestry. We feel that this effort had a positive effect on the number of fires starting in many areas," Hamm said.

Forestry officials plan to continue the increased prevention efforts during the summer and fall in preparation for the fall forest-fire season.

The third factor credited by Hamm for the decreased damage was increased law-enforcement efforts by Division of Forestry personnel. "During this last forest fire season we issued 482 citations for violations of various forest fire laws," he said.
