tobacco companies, and that much tobacco will be sold. "It's a very competitive market this year, with higher prices paid for better quality tobacco," Smalley said. "The tobacco farmer needs to take this into consideration when preparing his crop for the market."
"This year, buyers can be matched to hands, lakes and shores. The tobacco companies will pay the same price for all three. The important thing tobacco farmers need to pay attention to is striping that tobacco to fit the federal grades."
"A considerable amount of the tobacco sold this year will be going into the pool," Smalley said. "If it's going into the pool, we need to get it stripped so that it will fit a federal grade that will bring the best price possible."

Lettuce in the snow

from The Kentucky Garden Journal
I decided a few years ago that spring, summer and fall vegetable gardens just weren't enough. I wanted a winter vegetable garden too. I wanted to be able to go out on Christmas day, even in the snow, to pick lettuce and spinach for a fresh Christmas salad. And I did, with very little effort.
No, I wasn't vacationing in Florida that Christmas. It was in the cold north garden from my backyard garden, that isn't the secret — my garden was under a cold frame.
A cold frame is simply a bottomless wooden frame with sloping side walls that sits on the soil. The back (north wall) is several inches higher than the front (south wall) so that a lid or cover placed over the frame is on a slope. The frame should slope down towards the south so that sunlight can penetrate the soil and plants within. Normal sunlight is the only heat source for a cold frame.
I know many gardeners who have cold frames. Most used them for hardening off vegetable transplants in the spring, chitting pots of bulbs for indoor spring forcing or rooting cuttings from favorite landscape plants. But one friend had a passion for growing salad. He picked spinach from his garden all year, in fall and spring from his regular garden, and in summer from his cold frame and in winter from his cold frame lid with leafy greens. This was all I needed to see. A simple cold frame was out from one of my three feet of soil and half inch exterior plywood with a hinged lid of corrugated fiber glass. The cold frame hinges have removable pins that allow for assembly or breakdown in a matter of minutes.
My cold frame wasn't built and seeded until mid-October the year I started, but on Christmas day, even with a light cover of snow, I harvested greenhead, leaf lettuce, radishes and spinach to accompany my turkey. I took enough pictures that day to rival anyone's vacation trip.
I did help matters along in a few ways. I pre-warmed my seeds by quicker seedling establishment, better of the compost around the cold frame's walls to provide extra heat and put an old blanket over the cold frame at night to help conserve heat.
Old frames can be constructed for little or no money making them excellent garden additions.

That is a tremendous amount of variegated, or tie, grade, tobacco this year because of the yellow color which lowers the value of the leaf. With proper handling, the color can be improved and the value of the tobacco increased.
"One thing that will help is the number of times the tobacco comes in and out of case. The more times this happens, the more the yellow color is reduced," said Smalley.
Rather than taking it down and re-planting or holding it down early, it's better to leave the tobacco hanging in its bags until late. This means the farmer doesn't get it stripped as early as he would like to do so it's hanging in the barn it will be getting to the end of case, usually very night and ready to be sold. This will reduce that K-grade coloring.
"I would like to hold variegated tobacco back and not strip it until late in the year," Smalley advised. "To me the wait will be worth your time."

MCCONNELL'S TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS ENDORSED BY COUNTY JUDGES' ORGANIZATION
Kentucky Task Force on Exploited and Missing Children Chairman Mitch McConnell announced last week that the Kentucky Association of County Judges/Receivers had unanimously endorsed the 14 proposals contained in the citizens group's final report.
According to McConnell, who is the Jefferson County Judge/Receivers and former president of the Association, the endorsement reflects the organization's strong concern for the safety of the children of Kentucky.
McConnell added that the Task Force's proposals had received endorsement from newspapers across the state and from John Walsh, whose story about his son's abduction was the subject of the NBC movie "Adam."

THANK YOU FROM JUDGE ARNOLD
To all my friends, wishes and supporters. This is a sincere THANK YOU for your vote of support and your unflinching efforts during my election campaign.
Our success reaffirms my belief that positive campaigning is the proper approach to politics. During the next eight years I will work hard to provide you with the Circuit Court which you deserve and I am grateful for the opportunity to do so. I am humbled by your overwhelming support and one again would simply like to say — THANKS!
