What kinda bug is it?

Richard and David Hufana, of Lapeer, MI, grandsons of Mrs. Irene Pugh, Carlisle, Route 3, brought this insect to the Mercury Friday, Aug. 26, the question being what was it? Unless we miss our guess, Richard is holding what Webster calls a carnivorous, aquatic larva of a large North American insect much used as fish bait; also known as the dobson or heligrammite. They took it away from the cat which was chasing it on the driveway. Which way it is going in its metamorphosis escapes us, but we're sure there are plenty of fishermen who can set us straight. — Mercury photo.

FOREST FIRE ADVISORY SEEKS END TO OUTDOOR BURNING IN KENTUCKY

Natural Resources Secretary Jackie Swigart has issued a forest fire advisory asking all Kentucky citizens to refrain from any outdoor burning during the current dry weather conditions.

The no burning request was issued in order to help reduce the increasing possibility of fires in the state's forests and grasslands.

"We ask that everyone planning to be outdoors, in the state's parks and woodlands, use extreme caution to ensure that our woodlands do not suffer a repeat of the devastating fires which occurred in 1980," Swigart said.

Drought calls for cattle adjustments

Even if late rains stimulate fescue and temporary pasture, cattle producers will need to make some adjustments to keep the economic impact of this summer's drought to a minimum.

The severity of the drought won't be felt fully until calves are marketed and cows wintered, says Dr. Curtis Absher, Extension beef cattle specialist in the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture. "But a plan should be developed now to make the best adjustment decisions."

Absher offers some guidelines to consider in making these decisions.

First, he points out that creep feeding of calves is a way of stretching pasture and keeping calves growing. However, he notes that research has not yielded very favorable feed efficiency ratios. The most favorable feed efficiency ratios have been about eight pounds of creep per pound of calf gain, according to Absher.

Under the extreme drought conditions that exist, it probably is incorrect to assume that calves are receiving protein from the dam's milk or pasture as was done in this research," he said. Therefore, beef cattle specialists at UK recommend a creep of 13-15 percent protein and expect feed per pound of gain to be 6-8 pounds.

"However, before deciding to creep feed, consider preconditioning or short-term postweaning feeding programs," advises Absher. Among advantages he lists are:

— Calves can be removed from their dams so some cows can be rebred.

— Feed efficiency appears to be better than with creep feeding programs.

— Feeder buyers prefer weaned calves.

—Feeding calves may be easier than keeping creep feeders full and properly located.

The major disadvantage, according to the specialist, is that calves must be separated from the cow herd and this requires better facilities than many producers have.

Absher added that earlier than normal weaning (as young as four months) can reduce the drain on the cow and allow her to enter winter in good condition. And a preconditioning period could help avoid distressed selling and market "gluts" that are likely to occur.

A third suggestion offered by Absher is to cull early to reduce the demand on limited feed supplies.

"A good veterinarian or technician with current experience in palpation can determine pregnancy with good accuracy in as short a time as 30-40 days since breeding," said the specialist.

Besides culling open cows, Absher reminds producers to cull unsound cows — those with no or only a few teats, those with feet or leg problems, pendulous udders, balloon or blind teats, or bad eyes or dispositions.

Another of the specialist's recommendations is to market carefully this fall. "Marketing may be tricky this fall," he said. "We expect the peaks of marketing of feeder cattle to be early and heavy."

Absher says if selling when everyone else is selling can't be avoided, a reasonable alternative may be to sell steers and keep heifers for awhile since heifer prices generally are affected more than steer prices when prices are depressed.

Producers are encouraged to fully inventory their feed and assess their needs. "Proper hay storage and feeding may extend the feed supply," says Absher.

He also recommends that producers check with county agricultural Extension agents for precautions to take when making corn silage from drought stressed corn. Agents have information on determining when an earless corn plant reaches the proper percentage dry matter recommended for making silage.

Market steer shows scheduled

State 4-H and Future Farmers of America members will compete for top honors at five district steer shows scheduled during September.

"The shows in Hopkinsville, Murray, Owensboro, Elizabethtown and Lexington have attracted a total of 525 entries," said state Agriculture Commissioner Alben W. Barkley II.

Dr. Robert Garrigus of Middle Tennessee University will conduct the on-foot judging at each location.

After judging, all steers entered in the show will be sold at auction. "The auctions serve two purposes," Barkley explained. "Not only do people get a chance to purchase top-quality steers for their home freezers, but they also are helping the 4-H and FFA youths of their area by purchasing their animals at top prices."

In addition to the on-foot show and sale, all steers are eligible to compete in a carcass evaluation. The animals will be sent to area packing companies or processing plants for competition in the carcass contests.

Results of the contests will be announced about two weeks after the shows at awards banquets in each city.

Youngsters will receive ribbons and cash prizes provided by the Agriculture Department.

The department sponsors the steer shows in cooperation with the University of Kentucky Extension Service and the Bureau of Vocational Education. For more information concerning the steer shows, contact the Department of Agriculture, Division of Shows and Fairs, A-1 Suburban Park, Frankfort, KY 40601.
