Kay's Kitchen

By Kay Fisher

Recently I asked for recipes using turtle meat. Last week Mrs. W.G. Irvin called to tell me she had a recipe for Turtle Soup. It is from Clara Gregg's "Cookbook and Guide to Gracious Living," dated Oct. 4, 1953.

Readers in central Kentucky will remember the late Clasy Gregg, a native of Cynthiana and food editor for the Courier-Journal for a number of years.

The following is how the recipe appeared in the cookbook — verbatim.

TURTLE SOUP

We had many request for turtle soup. But recipes were scarce.

So we went to Charles L. Bronger, superintendent of the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times Engraving Department. Bronger is a recognized turtle-soup authority. He makes turtle soup like his father's August Bronger, 930 E. St. Catherine, is a grand master in the art of turtle-soup-making. Many in these parts will know what that means.

Our main difficulty was to get a recipe down on paper. We prodded, too, and finally achieved the desired end. Now we have made it and are ready to pass it on to you with details that begin with "first catch yourself a turtle" and end with "now eat."

Besides learning about turtle soup, we learned about turtles. There seems to be a turtle season. Turtles munch around all summer storing away fat so they can hide away during the winter and do what most of us would like to do — sleep through the bad weather. The idea is to catch them while they are fat and tender.

The surprising part about this turtle soup is that it's so easy to make. All that's necessary is a large pot, the ingredients, a good stirring arm, a good set of tasting buds, fire, and time.

If the turtle proves to be elusive, soup made from fresh beef tongue makes a good "mock turtle soup." And in case you don't want to make this much, Mr. Bronger says that roughly speaking a pound of turtle makes a gallon of soup.

Here is is, and our only regret is that we know we are making life hard for the turtles.

For approximately seven gallons of soup:

7 pounds of turtle (if you don't have that much turtle meat, fill out the amount with fresh beef tongue
¼ medium-size head of cabbage
6 medium-sized carrots
1 pound fresh green beans
1 whole stalk or bunch of celery
8 onions about 2½ inches in diameter
8 potatoes, about 3 inches in diameter
1 10-oz. can tomato puree
3 lemons
6 eggs
2 (No. 2½ cans) tomatoes or 6 cups of canned tomatoes
¼ cup whole allspice
1 can peas
Kernels from 2 ears of corn, if you like
1 bottle catsup
1 red pepper
Salt to taste
About 1 cup of browned flour
A bottle of claret
About 3½ gallons of water or the pot half full

Put turtle meat or turtle and fresh beef tongue on in cold water and allow it to come slowly to a boil. Turn down the heat and simmer gently until the meat is falling-apart tender. The turtle meat will cook more quickly than the tongue, but as a guess of time so you'll have some idea of what you are getting yourself into, we would say allow at least 3½ to 3¾ hours to cook the meat.

While the meat is cooking, get the vegetables ready and have the seasonings in hand.

When the meat has cooked, lift out of the broth, take out bones and trim the tongue if it it is used. Next everything must go through the meat chopper; yes, corn, peas, 3 of the 6 eggs and 2 of the 3 lemons. The extra hard-cooked egg and the lemon can be sliced and added as a garnish. We didn't put the tomatoes through the chopper, and that was a mistake, so remember to grind all ingredients. This means to put the canned tomato pulp through the chopper with everything else except the red pepper.

We found by waiting until the meat was cooked that we could use some of the easy-to-grind vegetables to help the meat and the softer vegetables through the chopper. The celery and carrots are excellent grinding helpers. Use either the medium or the fine knife. Mr. Bronger specifies that the grinding gauge should not have a larger opening than ¼ inch. Save all juice that drips from the grinder and put it with the other ground ingredients back into the stock. Add catchup and red pepper. Add some salt but wait until the last to finish off, so don't add too much at first. Tie the allspice in a cloth or small bag and toss it into the pot. Simmer all together for approximately four more hours. The sliced lemon can go in then too if you like, but we saved the final egg to put on the top.

The cooking is very simple — in fact the fire does the work, or most of it. There must be stirring, especially toward the last. Turtle soup will scorch as easily as jam.

Washington Harvest Festival Sept. 17 & 18

The "historic" village of Washington, Ky., cordially invites you to enjoy a weekend of festivities Sept. 17 and 18. This is the seventh annual Harvest Festival, antiques and crafts show and sale, sponsored by the Historic Washington Shopkeepers Association. This festival, always held the third weekend in September, has been very successful in bringing visitors into the area and making their heritage more meaning-ful to the local residents.

In 1785 George Meffard arrived here on his 5,000 acre land grant. He laid out the village of Washington and used the timber from his flatboat to build his home. This is now one of the last existing houses of its kind in the United States. It will be open both days. There are five other museums in Washington which will also be open to the public, including the Albert Sidney Johnston and Simon Kenton Shrines.

Washington, a village of many log cabins, boasts the only log bank and post office known in the United States today.

Broderick's 1788 Tavern still offers fine Kentucky dining daily from 11 a.m. until 9:30 p.m.

There are at present 20 antique and craft shops located in the town's main industry, open daily from 1-5 p.m. Also offered are services, such as brass and copper restoration, lamps repaired and rewired, picture framing and a train shop.

On Saturday evening at 7 p.m., Dr. George Cheatham and the Bracken County Air Raiders will bring square dancing to the village street. Prizes for the dancers are donated by each of the Washington shops.

There are lots of exhibitors and everyone is invited to participate with their finest wares of antiques, crafts, food and other appropriate items. There will be entertainment, antiques, artists, crafts, flea market, bake sales, baskets, needlework, pillows, plants, wreaths, dolls, hot dogs, fish, cotton candy, jewelry, a fish pond and much more.

The Pillsbury Boy's School will be open for touring from 3-4 p.m. both days. It was completed in 1812. The Georgian house is now the private home of David and Phyllis Helphenstine. They have restored and furnished it with period antiques.

Wiseman's Mill of Paris will be grinding and selling stone ground corn meal. Chair caning, weaving and a honey bee demonstration will be part of the exhibit.
