Competency testing in schools will insure mastery of skills

Can your second grader count by fives to 50? Or read a story silently and retell it in his or her own words?

Beginning this year, second grade pupils in Nicholas County and all Kentucky's public schools will be expected to master these and other skills.

A new state law requires the Kentucky State Board of Education to devise lists of essential skills in mathematics, reading, writing, spelling and literary use. Students in all grades must then be tested on those skills each year.

"This will establish a floor for learning," Superintendent of Public Instruction Alice McDonald said. "The essential skills will provide a springboard for learning at the higher levels.

"Kentucky has never before had a statewide standard. For the first time we will define what should be taught to ensure the student's success at the next grade level."

SKILLS LISTS for math and reading have already been drawn up and approved by the state board. The Kentucky Department of Education is now selecting a vendor to compile the tests and is expected to announce its choice within a few days.

The reading and math examinations will be given to a pilot group of about 1,000 students at each grade level by early 1985. The department will then decide whether revisions are necessary before the tests are administered to all students in April 1986.

Department staff members have begun work on establishing skills lists for writing, spelling and reference skills. Students will be tested for the first time on those subjects in the spring of 1986.

The law approved by the 1984 General Assembly called for reading and math skills lists to be determined first. Experts stressed to the legislators that comprehension of those skills was essential to the mastery of other subjects.

McDonald said compiling the lists was "an arduous process." Staff members from the department's Office of Research and Planning worked closely with the Office of Instruction in composing preliminary lists, she said.

McDONALD SAID it was her hope that testing in essential skills would eventually lead to the requirement that students pass tests for promotion to certain grade levels and for graduation.

"We're certainly moving in that direction," she said. "I think the public has told us that they are tired of social promotion. They're tired of graduating children who cannot read, who cannot write, and who cannot compute."

She said she intended to ask the 1986 Kentucky General Assembly for such a requirement.

Copies of the reading and math lists are now being distributed to each of the state's 180 public school districts. They will be in the hands of administrators in time to help with fall curriculum planning.

EXAMPLES of skills pupils will be expected to master are:

— Fourth-grade students should be able to count the value of coins and bills up to $5.

— Eight-grade students should be able to calculate the mean, median, mode or range for a set of data.

— Twelfth-grade students should be able to recognize propaganda and persuasion within written grade-level material.

The grade level at which a skill is listed is the one at which mastery is first expected and testing first conducted, officials emphasized. The skills will be taught before mastery is expected, at levels deemed appropriated by each local district, they said.

In addition to the new essential skills testing, Kentucky has established minimum skill levels in reading and math that students must meet before entering vocational education programs. Competency will be determined by test scores.

Piano students have recital

Mrs. Ann Craig presented her piano students in a recital Saturday, July 28 at the Pisgah Christian Church in Robertson County. Students performing were Laura Beth Brumagen and John Robert Brumagen, children of Mr. and Mrs. James Brumagen of Robertson County.

Kay's Kitchen

By Kay Fisher

Hot August days call for cool refreshing drinks. For something more than the usual bottle or can soft drink, try some of the following. You will find these thirst quenchers ideal for between-meal snacks. And children, playing hard all day need all the energy they can get. For adults counting calories, stick to fruit juices sparkled up with Club Soda which has no calories, but once in a while you might break over and try, say the Brazilian Float.

BRAZILIAN FLOAT

2½ cups cold milk
4 teaspoons instant coffee powder
½ cup canned chocolate syrup
1 pint vanilla ice cream

Combine milk, instant coffee, and chocolate syrup in blender container. Blend till smooth. Scoop ice cream into 4 tall glasses. Pour in chocolate mixture. Stir gently.

SODA PUNCH

1 46-ounce can tropical fruit punch, chilled
½ cup lemon juice
1 quart vanilla ice cream
2 7-ounce bottles lemon-lime carbonated beverage, chilled

Mix together fruit punch and lemon juice. Scoop half the ice cream into 10 glasses. Add half the punch mixture; muddle. Add remaining punch. Fill glasses, not too full, with carbonated beverage. Top each with a scoop of remaining ice cream.

APRICOT SHAKE

1 22-ounce can apricot pie filling
1 quart vanilla ice cream
3 cups milk
1 tablespoon lemon juice

Combine all ingredients in large mixer bowl. Divide in half and place in blender and blend well. Then blend second half. Pour into chilled glasses.

PINEAPPLE FROST

2 tablespoons instant tea powder
3 cups ice water
4 tablespoons frozen pineapple juice concentrate, thawed
1 pint pineapple sherbet

Dissolve tea in water; add pineapple concentrate. Pour into six glasses; add a scoop of sherbet to each. Stir slightly to muddle.

JAVA FIZZ

For coffee lovers, try this one. You can make them one at a time.

2 tablespoons milk
4 teaspoons sugar
2 teaspoons instant coffee powder
vanilla ice cream
1 cup gingerale, chilled

For each serving, combine the milk, sugar, and instant coffee powder in a tall glass. Add a spoonfull of ice cream and stir till melted. Add 2 scoops of ice cream. Then carefully pour in gingerale.

CHOCOLATE SODA

For each serving, pour ¼ cup chocolate syrup and 2 tablespoons milk into a chilled 14 to 16-ounce glass. Mix well. Add chilled carbonated water to fill glass ¾ full; stir. Then add 1 to 2 scoops of either vanilla or chocolate ice cream. Fill glass with carbonated water.

Fishing made worthwhile

by Emily Morse

If you do a lot of fishing in the Ohio River, it could pay off. The Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources is offering cash rewards for certain tagged fish caught from the river.

The prize money may be just enough to buy your bait, or it may yield enough to buy a brand new motor for your boat. The values of the tagged fish range from $1 to $1,000.

Approximately 375 fish were tagged in the western part of the river this year. The rewards provide fishermen with an incentive to relate the tags. Fisheries biologist Ralph Jackson uses the tags to study fish movement, age and growth rates.

Jackson estimates that without the tags the return rate would be around five percent. Last year's overall return rate was 16 percent. Approximately $669 was split among 67 fishermen. Some of the $1,000 fish from three previous years of the study are still in the river.

CASH REWARDS also encourage fishing in the Ohio River, which has become a much cleaner place in recent years because of stricter anti-pollution laws.

Among the different species, around 25 percent of the bass tags and 25 percent of the crappie tags have been returned. Only three to six percent of the catfish and carp tags were returned. Jackson said although catfish and carp were considered rough fish, they were included in the study because some fishermen do fish for them.

The biologists use electrofishing gear to catch the fish for tagging. The AC current stuns the fish until they can be tagged and returned to the same area.

Jackson said the brightly-colored tags look much like a "plastic price tag that you would find on clothes." The tag is a small piece of plastic tubing sticking out of the fish's back, just below the dorsal fin, with "KY FISH" and a number on it.

SPECIAL ENVELOPES for returning the tags are available from fish and wildlife conservation officers, at local bait and tackle shops or docks. In addition to the information requested on the envelope, the department needs Kentucky farm products directly to fairgrers Aug. 9-18.

The Cookout is located near the head of the Midway on Broadbent Lawn.

The Farmers' Market offers farm-fresh Kentucky-grown products to take home. Farmers from across the state will arrive each morning with fruits and vegetables straight from the garden.

Fire destroys Mattox home

A house and all its contents belonging to Phillip Mattox were destroyed in an early morning fire July 31, according to Mark Hughes, chief of the Nicholas County Fire Department.

Firemen were called to the home, located on the Saltwell Road, seven miles from Carlisle, about 1:15 a.m. Tuesday.

Cause of the blaze is unknown but Mattox reported that some type of explosion occured prior to discovery of the fire.

Heart transplant set this summer

Jewish Hospital and the University of Louisville School of Medicine, in cooperation, have established a thoracic and cardiovascular teaching program. Through this program and in cooperation with the Louisville Institute for Heart and Lung Disease, Jewish Hospital will embark on heart transplantation.

Cardiopulmonary transplantation will be the first in Kentucky and one of only about a dozen heart transplantation centers nationwide.

"This teaching program and heart transplantation activity represents a milestone in the treatment of heart disease in Kentucky," said Dr. Gerald D. Ternes, a thoracic and cardiovascular surgeon who is chairman of the Louisville Institute for Heart and Lung Disease at Jewish Hospital. "Heart transplantation is possible only with the support and commitment of both the School of Medicine and Jewish Hospital."

THE FIRST heart transplant is expected to be performed this summer, according to Dr. Lanyon A. Gray Jr., professor in the Department of Surgery at the University of Louisville School of Medicine. Dr. Gray, chief of thoracic and cardiovascular surgery at U of L, will head the special transplant team.

Dr. Gray now is evaluating candidates for the heart transplant. The candidate will have to meet stringent criteria:

— The person must be between the ages of 16 and 50;

— The candidate must have no serious disease other than that of the heart; and — The person must be one for whom no other heart procedure would work.
