MMI observes 92nd year

Millersburg Military Institute marked the beginning of its 92nd year this August when boys and girls throughout Kentucky and surrounding states settled in for the 1984-85 school year.
 Unlike public schools, which depend on taxpayers for funds to operate and maintain programs and facilities, MMI receives its operating funds from tuition fees and does not benefit from county or state tax dollars. With today's legislation restricting prayer in public schools, MMI still invites participation in assembly programs to discuss religious and moral values. In addition, all students are required to attend Sunday religious services, annual tuition, special campus events, sports programs and visits to the school by families and former students circulate a million dollars into the local economy each year.
THESE ARE ONLY 13 military schools in America providing a liberal arts academic program combined with strict military discipline in a boarding school atmosphere. After years of attending the private military schools that have survived, are now experiencing renewed interest from students and parents. This is true at MMI, which is once again receiving acclaim for academic and leadership programs designed to better prepare high school students for college and challenges the future will bring.
 Much of today's success at MMI is due to a commitment of excellence by the school's board of trustees and its president, Dr. Alan Saunders. Dr. Saunders arrived on campus in 1981 from Handolph-Macon Academy in Virginia. He is a two-time professor of education, dedicated to maintaining the highest of standards in every area of school life. In March of 1984 Millersburg Military Institute was dedicated as the official military school of the Commonwealth of Kentucky.
