We need each other

There is no doubt that farming has changed greatly in the past 40 years. One thing that hasn't changed is the interdependence of farmers and their city neighbors.

Americans have grown accustomed to relatively cheap food. However, many in urban areas fail to realize the importance of our nation's farm products.

Likewise, farmers have become increasingly dependent on goods and services which can only be found in urban areas.

The need for farmers and their city neighbors to better understand their social and economic ties led to the designation in 1950 of Farm City Week.

Playing safer

From our Good News-for-a-Change Desk: The Consumer Product Safety Commission recently reported that the number of toy-related injuries to children dropped from 120,000 in 1982 to 114,000 in 1983.

A seven inch 'snow job'

Mother Nature is reviving the scores for the summer dry spell. And for a week Wednesday night and early Thursday it seemed she would do it in one fell swoop.
