Friday is 'D' Day on drunk driving

"D" day on Deathways is the focal point of this year's Drunk and Drugged Driving Awareness Week, December 9-15.

Friday, December 14 has been designated "D" day, when State Police will make a concentrated effort to get drunk or drugged drivers off the road. This effort will include sobriety checkpoints, joint roadblocks manned by officers from neighboring states and joint enforcement efforts by state and local police on high density traffic and high accident rate roadways.

Public perception of the danger involved in drunk driving is increasing.

The Third Annual Drunk and Drugged Driving Awareness Week highlights activities that not only police agencies can implement, but also those various organizations and individuals that want to participate as well.

Call toll free, 1-800-223-6555 to report a drunk driver. The nearest state trooper will be dispatched to the scene.

Kentucky State Police urge all citizens to abstain from drinking and driving at all times, but be particularly aware of the dangerous combination during Awareness Week and the holiday seasons.

According to a publication by the U.S. Department of Transportation and the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, a projected 1,500,000 Americans will be killed in alcohol-related crashes by the year 2000 if drunk driving fatalities aren't reduced. This number exceeds the 1,200,000 killed in all the wars the U.S. has been involved in since 1776.

Christmas tree safety begins day of purchase

Making a live tree a safe part of Christmas celebrations requires care and judgment from the time the tree is purchased until it is taken down.

Dr. Deborah B. Hill, Extension forestry specialist in the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture, said needles on a fresh tree should bend, not break.

"Run your hand down a branch toward yourself. The needles near the tip of the branch should not come off," she said.

Another tip Hill suggested is bouncing the tree on its stump. Only dead, brown needles should fall off. And the limbs should be springy. If the limbs seem brittle or stiff, or if green needles fall off when the tree is bounced, it's too dry to be safely used.

HILL SAID one of the best ways to be certain of getting a fresh tree is to cut it yourself at one of several Christmas tree farms in the state.

"Imported trees are often cut in October and November and are shipped in from Michigan and other states," Hill said.

Captain Bill Hendricks of the Lexington Fire Department suggested having the tree sprayed with a fire retardant.

Dr. Mary H. Witt, UK Extension home horticulturist, said trees should be trimmed at the base before they are set up, and the freshly cut end should be placed in a container of fresh water which should be checked daily.

Dr. Thomas J. Nieman, UK landscape architecture professor, said the tree should be kept in a cool place in the home, and should be kept inside for no more than seven days.

"The advantage to using a live Christmas tree is that you can plant it in your yard afterwards," he said. The best trees for replanting are Colorado Blue Spruce, Norway Spruce and Douglas Fir.

LIBRARIES OFFER FREE BOOK-GIVING PAMPHLET

Helpful hints for the harried holiday shopper will be available at all of Kentucky's public libraries.

A free pamphlet, "Santa's Picks," recommends a variety of books for this season's gift-giving. Suggested titles, which include recent releases and time-honored favorites, are for recipients of all ages — from bedtime stories for the very young to fiction and "how-to" works for adults.

Prepared and distributed by the Kentucky Department for Libraries and Archives, the pamphlet includes a brief review and the price of each book. To minimize confusion in purchasing books for holiday gifts, "Santa's Picks" gives the suggested age range of readers for which each publication is intended. For a free copy of "Santa's Picks" check with your local public library.

A DAY IN HAWAII TO AIR ON KET

On Dec. 2, 1983, 50 of the world's top endurance photographers gathered in Hawaii for a marathon shoot to capture the next 24 hours.

The result, "A Day in the Life of Hawaii," will be aired on KET Sunday, Dec. 23, at 10 p.m.

At midnight, the photographers moved among the Islands, from the ferry, fearsome torch of the exploding Kilauea Volcano, to the sullen strippers in the dicos of Waikiki. They swam through startling seascapes in the warm waters, or tracked the ancient arctic stars above Mauna Loa.

The resulting 57 hours of tape were edited down to one hour of photography in motion, with the beauty of the Hawaiian Islands always at the foreground of the action.

Campaign to minimize toy-related injuries

With a veritable wonderland of toys available this holiday season, shoppers should consider how safe an item is before purchasing it for a child.

Kentucky children suffered an estimated 3,000 toy-related injuries last year, according to Dr. E.P. Conyers, supervisor of the Product Safety Section in the Department for Health Services.

In order to inform the public of any dangerous or unsafe toys, the Product Safety Section again conducted a statewide inspection of selected toy, department, discount and hardware stores, Conyers reported. Eight inspectors visited 140 stores across Kentucky, looking for toys that might be harmful or even fatal to youngsters before they wind up under somebody's Christmas tree.

"It's tragic when a toy bought to entertain a child causes a serious injury instead," said Conyers. "Our campaign is designed to minimize the number of toy-related injuries in the state."

WHILE THERE were 10 products recalled nationwide, Conyers noted that Kentucky inspectors had collected five samples to determine if they were harmful to children who use them.

He added that the inspectors followed federal standards during their inspections and inspected manufacturers, wholesalers and distributors as well as retail outlets.

High volume stores that carry import or low-quality toys were given particular attention, Conyers noted, since these toys are most often found out of compliance with federal safety standards.

One thing many manufacturers have voluntarily done over the past few years to help cut down toy-related injuries is to label the toys according to age group, said Conyers. This has helped shoppers decide if a toy they are considering buying is safe for the intended child.

SHOPPERS SHOULD still be on the alert for certain features on toys that could injure or even prove fatal to a child, warned Conyers, even though manufacturers have made improvements in toy safety over the past few years.

"Sharp edges and points and loose, flimsy small parts should be avoided for young children," he said. "Electrical toys should be checked for loose or protruding wires, and be wary of wooden toys with painted surfaces that might have more than the allowable amount of lead."

OTHER TIPS he recommended for shoppers include:

— Consider the ages of all children in the family. For example, a chemistry set for a 13-year-old can be dangerous if there is no place to use it and store it away from a four-year-old.

— Don't let price be the motivating factor. Look for quality, durability, good construction and education potential.

— Avoid toys that propel objects or make extremely loud noises. If such toys are purchased for older children, make sure they understand the potential dangers and know how to use the toys safely.

— When shopping for toys for babies or toddlers, beware of cords and strings that could become wrapped around a child's neck. Look for the "non-toxic" label. Make sure that all small parts, such as the eyes of a stuffed animal, are securely attached.

"Not only toys, but teething rings, squeeze toys and juvenile furniture should also be inspected before purchasing," said Conyers. "Ensuring a child's safety this Christmas will help ensure their happiness."
