Swearing intention, and Meyer said if these intentions are carried through, pork prices for most of 1984 will be lower. However, he expects to see some low prices to come back into the market in 1985.

Meyer offers some warnings under present conditions. He said that while the winter season, the length of time from high prices to low prices is now 18 to 24 months, it has been 14 to 16 months in the past few years.

"In addition," he said, "there usually are a few flare-ups, meaning the price level appears favorable, and then the price level drops and it is necessary to delay a return to profitable price levels."

Meyer says one sign that this situation is again recurring is that the number of long haulers in the country is at the lowest level since 1948.

Producers may want to transfer risk by contracting or hedging at profitable opportunities, suggests the specialist.

Meyer calls 1984 a disappointing year for many hogs producers in Kentucky and around the country with the steep and long drop in prices at the lowest level in several decades.

Life season huntings by John Wilson

Although most hunting seasons are still open, many sportsmen have left the field and are already beginning to look for spring fishing.

The best bet for the sportsperson who hunts and fishes is to buy a combination license, as you'll be able to hunt and fish and also set the wolf, the white bear, or any other animal in a couple of months.
