Tuberculosis skin test mandatory

Nicholas County children entering kindergarten and first grade classes at summer's end will need something their older brothers and sisters were not required to have.

That "something" is a skin test for tuberculosis. Public health officials are reminding parents that every child entering school for the first time must have had a tuberculin skin test within one year prior to the first day of school.

"We're not only reminding parents, but urging them to take their children to be skin-tested now, before the inevitable back-to-school rush," said Gary Hammonds, manager of the Cabinet of Human Resources TB control program. "This is the second school year for this regulation, but it is the first year the state's Department of Education will be strictly enforcing it."

Two fires reported on Moorefield Road

Two minor fires were reported on Moorefield Road in recent weeks.

On June 30, the Nicholas County Fire Department was called to the home of Mike Kenney, about a mile east of Carlisle, when an overheated skillet caught fire, damaging the stove and stove hood.

The firemen responded to a June 22 blaze which destroyed an outbuilding on the property of Joe Dailey, about eight miles from the city. Cause of the fire was unknown, Chief Mark Hughes said.

Beginner swim class at Blue Licks

Registration for the second set of beginner swimming classes at Blue Licks State Park will be from 9 a.m.-6 p.m. on Thursday and Friday, July 5 and 6.

Classes will be held on Monday through Friday for two weeks starting July 9 at 10 a.m. Anyone having finished the first grade of school is eligible to enroll in beginner classes by calling the park office, 289-5507, on Thursday and Friday. The only cost in the regular pool admission price of $1 for children 14 and under and $1.50 for adults.

Forty-nine people were enrolled in the two-week period that ended this past Friday and the park is looking forward to a similar group during this enrollment period, according to J. Richard Gaw, park manager.

Blue Licks State Park's head lifeguard Kelly Graves will again be in charge of the classes and will be assisted by the other park guards.

It was also announced that classes for advanced beginner, intermediate and life saving will be held starting July 23 with registration on July 19 and 20.

4-H Camp will be held July 16-20 at North Central Camp near Carlisle. Sharon Wilson, Mike Phillips, Suzanne Jones, Shari Ramey, Tony Smith and William Bean will accompany the group as adult leaders.

A total of 61 campers have signed up so far.

Kentucky Afield

Kentucky's other bass

by John Wilson
Dept. Fish & Wildlife

Say "bass" and most fishermen will immediately think of the largemouth. But there are actually nine fish in Kentucky that are commonly called "bass."

These basses are members of two separate families. Technically, the largemouth isn't a bass at all — it's a sunfish, belonging to the same family as the bluegill and crappie.

Also grouped in the sunfish family are Kentucky's other "black basses," the smallmouth bass, Kentucky bass (also spotted bass) and Coosa Bass. This last species is rare in Kentucky, but good populations do exist in Martin's Fork Lake and in several streams in Eastern Kentucky.

A predominately Southern fish, the Coosa bass is found in Georgia, Alabama and the Upper Cumberland River system in Kentucky, which represents the northernmost part of this fish's range.

KENTUCKY BASS and smallmouth bass are fairly widely distributed in Kentucky. The smallmouth seems to be expanding its range. Within the last couple of years, good sized smallmouth have been taken from Kentucky Lake, where they were rare if nonexistent just a few years before. In Central and Western Kentucky, the smallmouth is fairly common in streams.

The rock bass (also called the goggle-eye or redeye) is another "bass" that is actually a member of the extensive sunfish family. Rock bass prefer (naturally enough) rocks and is most abundant in streams with bedrock or boulder bottoms.

Kentucky's other family of basses are members of the sea bass family, which includes such ocean-dwelling species as the grouper. Inland, this family is represented by the native white bass and yellow bass. Most fishermen are familiar with the white bass, but the yellow bass, common primarily in Western Kentucky, is less well known.

This species looks similar to the white bass, except it doesn't get as large and has a yellowish cast to it. Although it seldom weighs over a pound, many folks prefer the yellow bass to the white bass as an eatin' fish. Yellow bass may be caught using the same tackle and techniques that work on white bass, so many anglers probably aren't aware that the yellow bass they're catching aren't small white bass.

THE STRIPED BASS (or rockfish) is also a member of the sea bass family. Originally a salt-water species, the "striper" has been introduced into several Kentucky lakes, but seems to have "taken" successfully only at Lake Cumberland.

Our latest bass is a cross between the white bass and the striped bass. This fish has been stocked in Herrington and Barren lakes to see if its survival rate is better than the pure-bred striped bass. Results, particularly at Herrington, so far seem encouraging.

This hybrid grows significantly larger than the white bass. The current world's record is 30 pounds, 6 ounces, but no one knows how large this newly-introduced hybrid will get.

It looks like, with this many different bass in Kentucky, a fisherman should be able to find at least one species willing to cooperate with his angling efforts. So the next time the pond, many folks prefer the yellow bass to the white bass as an eatin' fish. Yellow bass may be caught using the same tackle and techniques that work on white bass, so many anglers probably aren't aware that the yellow bass they're catching aren't small white bass.

Tourism funds made available

The state Tourism Cabinet has made a change in its matching funds program aimed at encouraging closer coordination of local advertising efforts, Tourism Secretary Wendell Cowgill announced.

Counties will now be aligned along area development district boundaries. The cabinet action does away with an alignment that placed Fayette and Jefferson counties in their own districts.

Through the matching funds program, the cabinet's Department of Travel Development provides money to counties and regions on a 50-50 match basis for promotional efforts like media advertising and brochures.

Tourism officials have studied the program over the last several months and concluded the existing layout created districts with no geographic logic. For example, Shelby County just east of Louisville, and Lincoln County, south of Lexington, were situated in the same district.

Meanwhile, the department is soon expected to announce matching funds grants totaling $325,000 for the fiscal year that starts July 1. Under the allocation formula the state uses, each county receives $500 plus 6.5 cents for each resident. That money is sought by gassing hotel conventions, tourism commissions, non-profit attractions and other associations for a variety of promotion programs. The requests are considered by district committees composed of local tourism officials. The committees then recommend to the state which project gets funding.

Spring acreage rebounding

All corn planted acreage in Kentucky is estimated at 1.63 million acres, according to the Crop and Livestock Reporting Service. This is 34 percent above 1983's reduced acreage due to the government PIK program, but two percent below the 1.68 million acres planted in 1982.

Acreage intended for grain at 1.46 million acres is up 51 percent (500,000 acres) from a year ago. While corn planted acreage is estimated at 130,000 acres, up 40,000 acres from 1983 (150 percent).

Farmers will plant an estimated 1.48 million acres of soybeans in 1984, two percent above last year. This includes acreage still to be planted. As of June 24,planting was 72 percent complete with the remaining acreage to be planted as wheat and barley are harvested.

State farmers have set 210,000 acres of burley this year, 13 percent above last year. Acreage for the Burley Belt is estimated at 317,800 acres, up nine percent from 1983 but eight percent below 1982. Kentucky acreage accounts for 66 percent of the Belt total.

Jobless rate here drops

While the unemployment rate in Nicholas County was listed at 7.8 percent during April, two neighboring counties reflected the state's highest and lowest jobless rate.

According to Cabinet of Human Resources figures released last week, Robertson County unemployment stood at a whopping 35.1 percent, while Bourbon was at the opposite end of the spectrum at 3.6 percent.

Statewide figures showed a 9.4 percent unemployment rate compared to 7.6 nationally.
