Legislative week in review. . .

Driving tip: If drinking don't

by Rep. Adrian Arnold

There need be no more anticipation over the crunch of bills that await legislators in the final weeks of the session — this week, indeed, revealed that the long-predicted avalanche of bills is upon us.

After lengthy committee hearings on Senate Bill 20, the drunken-driving legislation generated even more debate on the House floor. Although everyone was in agreement that the measure was needed to make Kentucky highways safe, there was disagreement on how best to do so.

The final version that found its way out of the House is headed back to the Senate because of amendments. One difference involves a provision to delay driver whose blood-alcohol level is 0.15 or above for at least four hours after his arrest. (State law presumes that a person registering a blood-alcohol reading of 0.10 is legally drunk.)

Another change in the Senate version would allow drivers convicted of drunken driving to enter a comprehensive-care education program instead of a drivers-training program sponsored by the Transportation Cabinet.

The drunken-driving bill was also amended to allow a charge of murder or manslaughter to be brought against a drunken driver involved in a fatal accident.

Also added to the Senate version of the bill was a recommendation that all persons convicted of drunken driving would have to pay a $150 service fee in addition to the fines. The fee would pay for enforcement of the law and support the jail costs, record-keeping, and the treatment and education program the bill calls for.

Of course, the key feature of the bill is that fines and jail terms for drunken drivers are increased significantly — a strong deterrent to persons who might be tempted to drink and drive.

SUPPORTERS of a so-called cable-television programming decency act gathered in the gallery of the House last week to display a show of support for the legislation.

The bill would take cable-TV operators to court for showing movies with bare-flesh shots and very private bedroom scenes. Opponents and supporters of the legislation clashed in a heated debate when an amendment to provide mandatory "lock boxes" for those not wishing to be exposed to that sort of programming was defeated.

The bill now goes to the Senate for consideration, amid lingering charges that it is unconstitutional.

TEMPERS ALSO FLARED as legislators continued to consider legislation in committee.

In an amazing return from the dead, a bill establishing a state ombudsman's office to monitor nursing-home care was reconsidered and approved by the House Health and Welfare Committee. Although the vote was close, the measure, breathing new life, is on its way to the full House for consideration.

A permissive piece of legislation was approved by the House Committee on Counties and Special Districts to allow local governments to develop special districts in their area to encourage urban development. House Bill 703 would provide for the creation of local development corporations. These corporations would be instruments for raising capital, and would be authorized to invest in businesses to attract them into the area.

State tax credits would sweeten the attraction of this arrangement.

Three terms to expire on board of education

Three seats on the Nicholas County Board of Education will be decided in the Nov. 6 general election.

The four-year terms of board members in districts one, four and five will expire this year.

District 1 includes Headquarters, Barterville and part of the City Building precinct.

District 4 includes Myers and part of Engine House precinct.

District 5 includes East Union, Mathias and the other part of City Building precinct.

Deadline for filing is Sept. 12.

Fish/Game Club potluck supper

The Nicholas County Fish and Game Club will have a potluck supper Friday, March 23, 7:30 p.m., at the club.

All membersyare urged to attend.
