Eye Openers

By Dr. Robert F. Pretzsch, Optometrist

Your Glasses Are Customized

Have you ever been in a card game when, just for fun, you and the other players swap eyeglasses between deals? If you have tried it and THINK you can see as well through someone else's lenses, we have news for you.

According to vision experts, your glasses may not be suited to anyone else in the world. In fact, they say the possible differences between lens prescriptions run into the TRILLIONS!

It's no wonder, when you consider that your personal prescription stipulates such requirements as: the power of lenses; correction of astigmatism (defect in vision); type of curvature for each eye; position of bifocals or trifocals; the right size and type of frame to position each lens precisely where it should be with respect to the pupil.

As a licensed professional practitioner, your eye doctor is dedicated to prescribing the very best lenses for YOUR vision shortcomings.

Presented in the interest of better vision by:

BETTER WEATHER SPEEDS HARVEST

Many Kentucky farmers worked Thanksgiving Day, Friday, Saturday and Sunday as generally favorable weather permitted harvesting on the better drained soils.

Many lowlands and riverbottoms continue too wet to permit combines in the field. Other fields are marginal and ground is being rutted by heavy equipment. Soil moisture was reported 64 percent surplus and 36 percent adequate.

Corn harvest is 80 percent complete compared with 97 percent a year ago and 96 percent for the five-year average. Corn is standing relatively well, although weak stalks are going down and wind is blowing off some ears. Lodging and down corn are especially serious on the white corn varieties.

Stripping the 1984 burley tobacco crop progressed to 43 percent complete. Burley quality is excellent. The crop is yielding well and many growers are taking excess tobacco home after weighing in at the warehouse.

Fall seeding of wheat is reported 70 percent complete. There are mixed opinions among wheat producers with some saying the season is too late to seed additional wheat acreage.

Other growers say they will continue to seed until mid-December if fields dry and temperatures stay mild. A heavier seeding rate is encouraged as germination and seedling survival rates will undoubtedly be reduced.

STATE PARK NATURALIST INTERVIEWED ON KET

The program features a different guest host interviewing interesting Kentuckians from the Commonwealth.

Ask before hunting

by John Wilson

Let's suppose you came home from a shopping trip one Sunday afternoon and found a group of strangers having a picnic in your back yard. How would you react? Wouldn't your first impulse be either to kick them out or to call the police and have them arrested for trespassing?

Why, then, should we expect a farmer to react any differently when he sees a group of strangers with guns tramping through his fields? His farm is as much his as your yard is yours, and chances are he has put many more time, money and effort into his land than you will ever put in yours, for his farm is his living, often his sole source of income.

WE SHOULD all be thankful for the generosity of the farmers who let others hunt on their lands. If some stranger drove up to your house and asked if he could swim in your pool, would you be as generous? The good will of landowners is something that all hunters need to cultivate, because it is a rare and precious thing.

Yet there are still those who refuse to extend to the landowner the most basic and common courtesy — asking permission to hunt on his land. Asking to hunt (or fish, or gather nuts) is the single most important step in building good relations with landowners, one which should not be neglected by anyone under any circumstances.

Why is asking permission so important? First, it shows that you acknowledge the farmer's rights as a property owner. Down on a basic psychological level we all have a sense of territory, of what is ours and of what we control, whether it's a back yard or a back 40 acres. Let someone else infringe upon this territory, and all kinds of impulsive aggressions start to surface — again, think of the example of strangers picnicking in your yard. Asking permission confirms these territorial rights; failure to do so violates them.

SECOND, THERE has been an increasing amount of rural crime in the past several years. Tractor batteries have been stolen or gas tanks drained, and property has been vandalized. This is not the fault of the hunter, but it does make the landowner keep a closer watch on his land. Approach a farmer openly, introduce yourself, even show some identification and he will know that you mean him no harm. But enter without permission and he will almost have to come chasing after you just to see what you're up to.

Third, asking permission gives you a chance to inquire about the location of outbuildings, livestock, planted fields or other areas where the farmer may not want you to hunt. And inquiring about such things also shows the landowner that you respect his property and his rights.

FINALLY, asking permission makes you less of a stranger and more of a friend and neighbor. Offering to share some of your bag with the landowner will still further cement this friendship.

I once asked permission to hike on land that was heavily posted with "no trespassing" signs. "Sure," the owner replied, "Those signs aren't for neighbors, they're for rascals."

That says it all. Ask — and be a neighbor. Don't ask — you're a rascal.

Corn harvest slowest ever

The outlook for most of Kentucky's major crops still remains good despite harvest delays caused by wet weather.

The corn harvest, slowest on record for this date, is now 75 percent complete. Because of the wet weather, this is well behind last year's 94 percent and the five-year average of 93 percent.

Also, the moisture content remains high, and much of the corn harvested requires additional drying.

Kentucky's corn for grain production is forecast at 141.6 million bushels, more than three times last year's drought- and FDK-shortened crop.

The yield is expected to average 97 bushels per acre, compared to 48 bushels last year and 103 bushels in 1982.

TOBACCO STRIPPING is 33 percent complete, slightly ahead of last year's 30 percent, but behind the 36 percent average. Burley quality appears to be good.

For continued information on the tobacco market, farmers may call the Department of Agriculture's toll-free line, 1-800-633-9262.

Burley production in the Commonwealth is expected to total 491.8 million pounds, up 19 percent from last year. The yield is expected to average 2,343 pounds, up from 1,600 pounds last year, but down from 2,400 in 1982.

Fall wheat seeding reached 58 percent complete, compared to 90 percent last year, and some acreage probably will not get seeded because of the harvest delays. Wet fields have also slowed grain sorghum harvest.

Pasture conditions have benefitted greatly from recent rains and are in good-to-excellent condition across the state.

ULTRASONIC PEST REPELLERS DON'T MEET MAKERS' CLAIMS

Devices on the market that are supposed to repel pests and drive them away with sound waves above the range of human hearing are ineffective and far from noiseless.

Dr. Chris Christensen, an entomologist with the UK College of Agriculture, said the devices were tested and found to be of no practical use in repelling mosquitos, roaches, mice or rats.

Following several complaints to the U.S. Postal Service, the U.S. Department of Agriculture was asked to test the devices.

Dr. Carl E. Schreck, at the USDA's Insects Affecting Man and Animals research laboratory in Gainesville, Fla., directed tests of the devices and measurements of the sound waves the gadgets produced.

Supposedly ultrasonic waves transmitted by the machines neither repelled the insect or stopped the mosquitos from biting. In a test of one machine, mosquitos actually bit more often when the machine was on than when it was off.

In addition to claims that the sound waves are inaudible, manufacturers also claim they are harmless to humans. Both claims were found to be false.

Individuals who have purchased one of the devices and are not satisfied that it does what the manufacturers claimed it would do, should first contact the manufacturer and request a refund. If such a request is denied, buyers may file a complaint with the U.S. Postal Service if the post office was involved in the ordering or delivery of the product.

'85 burley crop hearing Dec. 14 in Lexington

by Bennett Roach

With the third largest burley tobacco crop on record now being marketed, the growers are asked by the U.S. Department of Agriculture for their views in setting next year's national marketing quota.

A public hearing will be held on Friday, Dec. 14 at the University of Kentucky's E.S. Good Barn, from 10 a.m. till noon. Grower comments are invited on the supply and demand outlook and other matters relating to the burley program.

All indications from grower groups are that a reduction will be asked, in view of present oversupplies and the large buildup in pool stocks. Options under USDA study are a cut of 5.7 percent and one of 10 percent. The latter is the maximum allowed under present law.

Directors of the Burley Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association have often appealed for lifting the legal limit on cuts. John M. Berry, general counsel for the Association, says "If we could have had a 25 percent reduction in 1982 or '83 we wouldn't have the problem we now have."

SHARING ATTENTION with the 1985 marketing quota are two other top concerns — the question of import quotas and the future of the No-Net-Cost program. At its November meeting the board of directors of the Burley Association by unanimous vote passed a resolution telling the USDA that imports of burley tobacco are endangering the price support program.

The law empowers the Secretary of Agriculture to take action if imports are found to be "detrimentally affecting" U.S. farm commodities.

Frank B. Snodgrass, vice president and executive secretary of the Burley and Dark Leaf Tobacco Export Association, told the directors that the USDA task force on tobacco will be in Lexington on November 29 for two meetings with tobacco organizations.

Snodgrass has just completed a market promotion trip to several countries in Southeast Asia, including Malaysia, Indonesia, South Korea and Japan. He reported demand is strong and growing for U.S. blended cigarettes. American manufacturers account for about 20 percent of retail sales in Malaysia, and "have a great future there in a country of 169 people, where nearly every body smokes."

SOUTH KOREA holds a potential for increased use of burley blends, with the Asian Games scheduled there for 1986 and the Olympics in 1988, said Snodgrass. Japan manufacturers told Snodgrass they would purchase the same amount of American tobacco as last year, including about 20 million pounds of burley.

Snodgrass, whose organization is based in Washington, said the legislative outlook for tobacco is unclear following the re-election of President Reagan, especially in the Senate agriculture committee, and the loss of Senator Walter (Dee) Huddleston, D-Ky. as its ranking minority member.

Bruce Strader, Association first vice-president, reported that two meetings have been held by the joint committee between the cooperative and the Kentucky Farm Bureau. Strader said the groups are in agreement on studies of current problems and objectives and that further sessions are planned.

Joe McDaniel, president of the Growers Association, cited sales figures from 1973 through 1982 to show that the better high-priced tobacco is going under loan.

THE AVERAGE support price in this eight-year period on 289 million pounds taken by the pool was $185.9 per 100, he said, "showing that the companies are not buying high-priced tobacco."

Alvin R. Beckley, executive secretary-treasurer of the Association, reported at last week's annual meeting of delegates that the debt on the drought-damaged 1983 crop holdings now amounts to $403 million. None has been sold, he said, but the 1982 loan stocks have sold well.

The No-Net-Cost account held by Commodity Credit Corporation from collections on the 1982 and '83 crops now amounts to $38.1 million, Allen Harman, assistant secretary, informed the delegates. He emphasized that the Association has no control over the funds, which are held in the U.S. Treasury to insure against any future losses in the price support program.

A reduction in 1985 burley quotas, also an increase in the No-Net-Cost fees are probable, said J.W. Davis, of Washington, head of the USDA Tobacco Division. But he gave no indication of what amount the No-Net-Cost might be, saying it would depend upon present market developments and size of the loan holdings.

The No-Net-Cost checkoff started at one cent per pound in 1982, was raised to five cents in 1983, and now is nine cents on the '84 crop.

The Kentucky State Police Professional Association, Post 6, will for the first time in a row play Santa Claus to a number of families in the Post 6 district.

The district is made up of 10 counties including Nicholas. Boone, Kenton, Campbell, Robertson, Bracken, Grant, Pendleton, Harrison and Bourbon. Last year the association was able to help approximately 150 families which included 500 children.

Trooper Charles Seay stated that in order for the KSPPA to have a meeting with tobacco organizations.
