Forest fire season opens

By John Wilcox, Dept. Fish & Wildlife.

A season opened Oct. 1 which all outdoorsmen should be particularly aware of this year: It's not a hunting season, but the fall forest fire hazard season, when special regulations governing burning go into effect and when anyone who ventures into woodlands or brushlands should be especially careful about fires.

Hefty specimen

Acornite Florn brought these tooth-overs to the Mercury office last Thursday for our inspection. The small one is shown only to emphasize the size of the larger one, which weighed about 50 pounds and is 38 inches long from tip to bottom. The circumference of the bottom is 22 1/2 inches. This hefty specimen was given to us on the farm of Arnette and her husband, E. owned by Everett's father, Olin C. Florn.

would be in some respect still limits to all but firefighters and other authorized persons.

FIRESET FIRE are started by a variety of causes, including lightning, burning debris, careless smoking, campfires, the use of chain saws or other equipment, or vehicles. But the real fact is that almost 90 percent of Kentucky's forest fires are deliberately set. Deliberate arson is the second most prevalent cause of most fires in an average year. Fires caused by human debris is the leading cause.

In 1983, the General Assembly substantially increased the penalties for deliberately setting woods or brush fires on the lands of another. This crime is now a felony punishable by fines of from $1,000 to $5,000 and imprisonment of up to five years.

Other violations of the fire code are punishable with minimum fines of $25 and maximum of $500. Special regulations were in effect during both the spring (March 1-May 15) and fall (Oct. 1-Dec. 31) fire hazard seasons.

During these periods it is illegal to set any fire within 100 feet of a woodland or brushland, except between 4:30 p.m. and midnight.
