Don Mårgyson of Bourbon County is in the process of welding an flight ends for feeder breakers in picture No. 2.

World's largest

Picture No. 3 is a partial view of the "grandaddy of 'em all" when it comes to feeder-breakers. This model designed and assembled at Stamler is the largest one made in the United States. It is in its final production stage at the Millersburg plant. The feeder-breaker is a primary coal crusher to be utilized by the world's largest miner and processor of frozen tar sands and will reduce lumps of mined material to a beltable size of about 3,000 tons per hour. The final product is crude oil. The breaker measures 43 feet long, 34 feet wide, 25 feet high and weighs 250 tons. It is powered by a 900 horsepower motor.—Mercury photo.

addressed to each candidate. They were (1) what recent legislation do you feel will help the schools the most? (2) How important do you feel the CTBS (California Test of Basic Skills) scores are in judging schools? (3) If you could make one change in the school system, what would it be? (4) What suggestions do you have for dealing with individual differences in the schools? The third question drew the longest response from the candidates.

Mrs. Zachary stated that in visiting voters in her district, the one complaint she heard over and over again concerned the open concept of the elementary school. The concern is over the noise and distractions present in this type of school.

Other changes expressed by District 5 voters were more and smaller classes for grades one through four in order to insure more individual attention during these important first years of schooling; improve the curriculum in math and science in high school, offering programs for gifted children; and instituting college prep classes with separate high school diplomas indicating the successful completion of such classes.

Mrs. Farah sees the lack of strong math and science courses a national problem, and she doesn't want "our kids to get through high school and come out on the short end of the stick" when it comes to mastery of these important subjects. She also would like to see special programs set up for gifted children.

Sims feels that there is a shortage of materials and supplies in the school system with teachers many times digging into their own pockets to purchase needed items.

He asked, "If they (teachers) turn a list in for supplies, why aren't they given the materials?"

QUESTIONS from the audience followed. Dr. Tim Scott was concerned about the candidates' views on a possible tax hike if the elementary school open concept system should be deemed inadequate.

All three candidates were not in favor of another tax. Mrs. Farah said that larger, padded petitions might possibly be the answer. She stated, "We haven't quite got it down yet," but she seen a need for further investigation into a working solution.

"I don't particularly agree with it (open concept)," Sims responded. "My father was on the board when the new sch- was built. As for a tax hike...no a-."

Zachary stated that the un-rstood, open concept problems could p-ably be solved by using more [illegible] classrooms. She also stated, "I think you're going to have to hear from the parents about any new tax hike."

REV. ALLEN CAMPBELL posed the question, "Which community are we preparing our children for: Carlisle, the nation, or the world?" All three candidates felt strongly that the goal of the school system should be to council and instruct students so that they would be able to meet challenges, no matter where they lived and worked.

Also from the audience, David Zachary said he would like to see courses such as calculus, other higher math and science, and another foreign language offered in high school. He also asked if the candidates would favor more in-depth counseling for students planning to attend college? Candidates agreed, and suggested that teachers and parents alike encourage students to tackle these tougher subjects.

Mrs. Boogie Hall, who has been attending a sex education seminar between parents and children at the Presbyterian Church, asked if the candidates would be in favor of sex education classes in the elementary grades six through eight.

The reply from all three was "yes" if handled correctly, even though they felt the home is also the place to learn about sex, especially when pre-school children start asking questions.

Mrs. Zachary asked, "Do you think that's (sixth grade) early enough? For some children the school may be the only place to learn the correct information." Mrs. Farah feels that you can't start early enough. As she points out, "between television and the school bus, they know more than I did at their age!" Therefore, she said, "the correct information is vital from the home and the school."

The feasibility of a middle school was posed by Mrs. Barbara Hopkins. Candidates responded that a study would have to be conducted before judgment could be made.

WHAT TO DO about the drop out rate which now stands at 22 percent puzzled all three candidates. They expressed two possible reasons: students getting so far behind their peers scholastically that it was easier to give up and quit; and that after school hours and weekend jobs were realizing a monetary gain that seemed far more appealing than school to the drop out students.

The only solution offered at the moment was more encouragement from parents and teachers to stay in school.

Gary Reed asked the panel, "What are we going to do about 'Malfunction Junction'?" referring to the intersection of West Main Street and the Old Paris Pike when the school buses are leaving to take students home after school.

He suggested a flashing light and/or policeman directing traffic and/or strict enforcement of a slow-speed zone. Panel members rated that suggestion "excellent."

Dr. Orias Villaflor raised the question of the possibility of hiring a psychologist (maybe on a part-time basis) to counsel students who are behind in their classes due to home, social or personal problems. This suggestion was greeted favorably by the candidates.

Sponsors of the forum included the Carlisle Community Woman's Club, which coordinated the event, the Carlisle/Nicholas County Chamber of Commerce, Lions Club, Rotary Club, Ministerial Association, Library Board, for Academic Excellence and the Paris Nicholas County Pritchard Committee League of Women Voters.

Why Should Kentucky Sheriffs Be Allowed To Seek Re-Election

* Experience in the office is very important. Better qualified people would seek the office if they knew they could serve more than one term.

* Continuity of vital programs could be improved upon. The Ky. Sheriff's Boys & Girls Ranch is an example of the many programs sheriffs are involved in. The Sheriffs Ranch is now the largest in the nation and takes care of over 700 needy children, free of charge each summer.

* After the sheriff, as the chief law enforcement official, has properly learned the duties of the office, such as processing taxes, court policies and procedures, serving of legal papers, subpoenas, summonses, law enforcement techniques, transportation of prisoners, patrolling and arresting procedures, the term is over. The Sheriff cannot even remain in the office as deputy in the four years succeeding the term. This, alone, costs the taxpayers millions of dollars. Kentucky is the only state in the nation where Sheriffs cannot seek re-election.

* The Sheriff's office is the only office in the Courthouse which cannot seek re-election. Even though a sheriff works diligently alongside his peers in the Courthouse, ALL can succeed themselves, except the Sheriff. This is quite possibly unconstitutional and certainly not fair to the citizens of our Commonwealth.

☞ The constitution for the Sheriff was written in the late 1800's. Times have changed dramatically since then. However, the Sheriff still has the same archaic guidelines.

* Many states have unlimited tenure for Sheriffs, but that doesn't mean a Sheriff doesn't have to run and win every four years. It is not a lifetime situation and one must be qualified and capable in order to win again. Just because an official has the opportunity to run does not guarantee re-election. We have a very sophisticated voter today, who reads more, watches more television and is well read of the officials they elect. Give them more credit than in the past.
