Barefoot School, way back...

This copy of the Barefoot School the first year it was built, thought to have been 1906, was donated to the Nicholas County Historical Society by Blaine Price whose grandfather, Veach Mattox of Paris, owns the original. Mrs. Russell Mattox (Ella Sue Earlywine) gave it to Veach, her brother-in-law, after her husband's death. She is pictured fourth from the left. Does anyone know the names of others pictured? The Society is also seeking a picture of the Walnut Grove School. The School Board has the one near Blue Licks but not the other one. Contact The Mercury with any information. — Photo submitted

Jesse Stuart legend lives at Greenbo Lake

by Jeff Lewis

"There is something about the floating of white clouds above pines and sun flares behind the oak trees. There is something to it that leaves an image on the album of the brain and, like the yellow flame of an old lamp, it flickers often but will not go out." — from Beyond Dark Hills by Jesse Stuart.

Grayson, Ky. — This region, this northeast corner of Kentucky, crossed and bounded by rivers, the Ohio, the Licking, the Little and the Big Sandy rivers; dotted with deep hills heavily forested, or cleared, and terraced with the back-and-forth walking paths of cattle; and graced with sinuous hillhollows, ribbons of rich soil that hide between the hills — other regions have been more loudly trumpeted, but none more sweetly sung.

For this was the birthplace, home, and constant subject of Kentucky's best-loved poet, Jesse Stuart, author of Man With A Bull-Tongue Plow, Taps for Private Tussie, and many other books of verse and stories about his native W Hollow, only a couple of miles from Greenbo Lake State Resort Park.

Greenbo Lake and W Hollow both lie just off KY-1 in Greenup County, about 15 miles north of 1-64. The center of the park is the modern, 36-room Jesse Stuart Lodge, built on a high knoll overlooking the lake, where Stuart spent many a Sunday afternoon in his last years.

The lake itself, enlarged to 225 acres during the 1960s by the construction of a dam across one of the three creeks which feed into it, curls like a fishhook around the knoll. At one end, just below the ledge, a wide sandy beach attracts swimmers, while at the other end, a well-appointed marina and camp store serve the needs of boaters and fishermen. Boat rental is reasonable: $5 per hour and $20 per day for a motorboat, less for rowboats and canoes, more for pontoon boats accommodating a while party. The lake is cool, clean and quiet; boat engines are limited to 7½ horsepower.

For campers and RVers, just adjacent to the marina are 63 full hookups, and the campground is furnished with bathhouses, picnic areas and recreation equipment. The lodge has a full-sized swimming pool and, like other Kentucky resort parks, a recreation staff providing daily activities for children and grownups alike, such as hayrides, hikes and square dances. This year Greenbo Lake is open all year for the first time.

The memory of Jesse Stuart is already much in evidence at Greenbo, and at the lodge named for him; his portrait dominates the central hall, and some manuscript pages of his poetry are displayed on the way to the dining room. But according to Park Superintendent Sam Devine, the possibility of a Jesse Stuart museum is being seriously discussed.

Some Social Security benefits to be taxed

Some higher income retirees who receive social security benefits will have to pay federal income tax on part of their benefits, the Internal Revenue Service said.

Those who may be affected include single social security recipients whose income including one-half of social security benefits, is expected to be more than $25,000, and married social security recipients whose 1984 joint income including one-half of social security benefits will exceed $32,000. These rules also apply to recipients of Tier 1 Railroad Retirement benefits (those benefits that are directly analogous to social security payments).

Because social security benefits and Tier 1 Railroad Retirement benefits are not subject to withholding, these individuals may need to make estimated tax payments.

For more information call the IRS, toll-free at 1-800-424-1040.
