Timely tip

A tip from Organic Gardening to try with your fall cabbage to keep them warm-free. As soon as the heads start to form, stretch a stocking or the sod section from panty hose over the head. It supposedly will expand as the head grows and permit adequate sun penetration and air circulation, but will keep the pests out.

Blue mold spreads throughout county

Blue mold has spread to virtually every area of Nicholas County, Mike Phillips, county extension agent for agriculture told The Mercury this week.

The disease, which had been discovered 10 days ago in three fields in the Saltwell, East Union and Myers areas, has scattered pretty much county-wide, although at a lesser rate in recent days, Phillips said Monday.

Of the known 30-40 positive, active cases of blue mold all were in fields where the plants had not been treated, he said.

"From all indications, less than half the tobacco acreage in the county has been treated. It looks like only 30 percent of this year's crop has been treated on a statewide basis."

Rain and high humidity have contributed to the spread of the fungus, which first attacks lower leaves of the plant. Shaded areas of the field and crops planted in low-lying fields which have poor air movement are more likely to contract the disease.

Phillips had a word of warning for producers with known blue mold who are planning to house their crop in the near future. He suggests leaving the cut sticks in the field at least three days to will before putting it in the barn.

"The spores will continue to grow in the barn as long as there is moisture in the plant, he pointed out.

Farm Heritage Weekend Aug. 3, 4 in Louisville

How ya goin' to keep 'em on the city, after they've seen the farm?

That might well be the question of the day after Kentuckians participate in the first Farm Heritage Weekend on Louisville's Riverfront Plaza/Belvedere.

The Farm Heritage Weekend, Aug. 3-4, is the fourth in a series conducted by the Heritage Corp. of Louisville and Jefferson County. The weekend celebrations are planned to acquaint people with ethnic backgrounds and lifestyles of area residents.

This new addition to the heritage weekend line-up will feature Kentucky's rich agricultural heritage from crafts to animals to "down home" entertainment, including a concert by Mel Tillis Aug. 3 at 8 p.m. and Randy Atcher and the Hayloft Hoedown and Square Dance Aug. 4 at 7 p.m.

FARM HERITAGE Weekend is free to the public. Activities will be going on from 1 p.m. to 10 p.m. both days.

Country ham and biscuits will be sold by the Kentucky Country Ham Producers, barbecued lamb by the Kentucky Sheep Producers, pork chops by the Kentucky Pork Producers, beef burgers by the Kentucky Beef Cattle Association, honey by the Kentucky Beekeepers Association and breads and baking mixes by the Kentucky Feed and Grain Association.

People who want to take home farm-fresh Kentucky fruits and vegetables can shop at a farmers' market of fresh produce sponsored by the Kentucky Vegetable Growers.

The dairy industry will also have a booth at the festival.

A portion of the Belvedere will become a barnyard where a variety of farm animals will be displayed in a petting zoo. People can also watch sheep being sheared, bees working in a hive and chickens being hatched.

In addition, there will be square dancing, a fiddlin' contest, clogging and lots of music. A lot of life on the farm from yesteryear will be depicted through demonstrations of spinning and weaving wool, lye-soap making, quilting and candle making.

Plans also include a farm equipment museum featuring antique and modern-day farm machinery and implements.

Eye Openers
By Dr. Robert F. Pretzsch, Optometrist
Inserting Contact Lenses
Q. What should be done if a lens feels uncomfortable after it has been inserted?
A. First, make certain that your lens is centered properly. Cover the other eye and look at a particular object. If you do not see clearly, touch the lens with the clean index finger and slide it towards the center of your eye. Blink and the lens should center itself. The discomfort should disappear.
If discomfort continues, remove the lens and clean it before reinserting it. Tiny particles of protein deposit can adhere to soft contacts, making the lenses uncomfortable. If discomfort persists, remove the lens again and carefully check to see if the lens is inside out, or if there are any small tears on its edges. The inside-out problem is easily resolved: just invert the lens. If the lens is torn, do not reinsert it, you need a replacement. Soft contact lenses are fragile and do not last indefinitely. If you want to wear them all the time, you should have a second pair for emergencies.

Rockfishing on the Ohio River

by Art Lander Jr.

Much to the delight of anglers and fishery biologists alike, the Ohio River is yielding good catches of adult rockfish. It's evident that the intensive stocking efforts during the past few years are really beginning to pay dividends.

More and more anglers are hooking into these exciting sportfish by trolling crankbaits, vertical jigging spoons or casting curlytail and bucktail jigs. The fishing is especially good during these hot summer months when water levels stabilize, and "stripers" school up in oxygen-rich tailwater areas. The rockfish, or purebred "striper" as he's often called, is making his presence known all along the lower 664 miles of river which form our state's northernmost boundary.

America's third largest river, the Ohio, is 981 miles long, arising in Pittsburgh at the confluence of the Monongahela and Allegheny rivers, and ending in Cairo, Illinois, at its junction with the Mississippi. Kentucky's Ohio River "striper" fishery, and for that matter, most all game fish populations in the wide, slow-moving waterway, are vastly under utilized.

CONSTITUTING over 185,000 surface acres of water, the Ohio River is one of the state's top fishing "holes," yet many anglers don't realize this fact. Fishing pressure is low and there are thousands of acres of shallow, backwater habitat. Population studies have proven that game fish standing crops are equal to or surpass those found in many of the state's large storage impoundments. The river supports diverse game fish populations, and in the past 40 years, water quality has improved dramatically because of pollution abatement.

Soil moisture levels short

Moisture levels continue to be short over much of Kentucky, although rain showers the latter part of the week brought relief to some areas. More rainfall will be needed to bring moisture levels up to adequate level.

The area north of a line from Louisville eastward has mostly adequate soil moisture, while other areas are mostly short. Statewide as of July 26, soil moisture was rated 67 percent short and 33 percent adequate. This is somewhat improved from a week earlier when only 23 percent of the state reported adequate moisture.

Farmers were busy last week topping their tobacco. Topping is taking place much earlier than usual and is 28 percent complete.

A substantial "striper" fishery has also been established in south-central Kentucky's Lake Cumberland, a 52,250-acre impoundment in Pulaski, Clinton, Wayne and Russell counties, where fish over 30 pounds are often taken. In fact, Kentucky's state record rockfish, a 49-pound, eight ounce lunker, was caught from the Beaver Creek embayment just last December by Monticello angler Robbie Bell. In recent weeks 153,000 rockfish fingerlings were placed in the deep, coldwater lake as part of an ongoing stocking program that dates back to the late 1960s.

Last year, 1,077,000 fingerling "stripers" were stocked in the Ohio River, at a rate of approximately five fish per acre. This year's allotment — a total of 947,000 fingerlings measuring between 1.5 and 2.5 inches in length — was released in several pools of the river during late June and early July.

Biologist Mike Hearn, who helped raise the fish at the Minor E. Clark Fish Hatchery in Morehead, explained that when the fry were received in early May, the brooder ponds were fertilized, sold then three or four weeks later we began feeding them No. 1 and No. 2 trout chow, which is a powdery fine feed, almost like dust." Of the three million fry trucked in from hatcheries in Tennessee and Virginia, 2.8 million were eventually stocked in Kentucky as fingerlings, which Hearn said is a good survival rate.

FORAGE is abundant in the Ohio River and the rockfish can attain legal length in just over two years. Legal fish must be at least 18 inches in length, and the daily creel limit is five. To help biologists better understand the age and growth characteristics of rockfish, anglers are requested to send in scale samples from the legal fish they harvest. Postage paid envelopes are usually available at local bait and tackle stores, but if not, anglers may send in scale samples directly to the department. Be sure to include the date the fish was caught, the location, and the fish's length and weight. Take at least four scales from the side of the fish, just above the pectoral fin. The mailing address is: Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources, No. 1 Game Farm Road, Frankfort, KY 40601.

During the summer it's not uncommon to find big schools of "keeper" rockfish below all the Ohio River dams, especially Cannelton, McAlpine, Markland and Meldahl. "Stripers" that were stocked in the Ohio River are also migrating up the Kentucky, Licking and Cumberland rivers, providing local anglers with trophy opportunities that didn't exist five years ago.
