Get permission to hunt and fish

By Art Lander Jr.
With the opening of squirrel season Saturday, August 17, sportsmen are reminded that permission to hunt or fish on privately owned land is a privilege extended by the landowner.

In Kentucky, the landowner's right to sue who may hunt or fish on his land, and who may not, is guaranteed by law. The landowner's sportsmen are reminded that permission to hunt or fish on privately owned land is a privilege extended by the landowner.

Respect for landowner's rights and property is at the very foundation of good landowner-sportsman relations. If a good sportsman is a good sportsman, it's a good idea to maintain a good rapport with the landowner - to take an active interest in his land and its resources. This may mean sharing the bag or the fish.

For those who disregard the law, the consequences are severe. A conviction under KRS 100.80, the penalty for hunting or fishing on private land without the owner's consent, is a fine of up to $100. A conviction under KRS 100.81, the penalty for hunting or fishing on private land without the owner's consent, is a fine of up to $100.

It is the responsibility of the sportsman to know the law and to respect the landowner's property. If the sportsman is a good sportsman, it's a good idea to maintain a good rapport with the landowner - to take an active interest in his land and its resources. This may mean sharing the bag or the fish.
