In case you've been wondering how safe you are when driving on Kentucky roads and roads, Blue-Police Commissioner Morgan T. Elkins says "you have plenty to worry about."

"One in every 20 citizens was involved in a traffic accident last year," according to Elkins, who released the 1984 figures. For the year, 127,182 accidents were reported - an increase of nearly eight percent over 1983.

Although the number of fatal accidents decreased, property and injury accidents jumped by more than 10,000 incidents. Some 41,900 persons were injured and 31 persons lost their lives in traffic accidents during 1984.

Nicholas County had three fatal accidents in 1984, up from one the previous year. All told, 42 accidents were reported compared to 118 in 1983.

ELKINS CONSIDERS 'unsafe speed' and 'driving under the influence of alcohol' to be Kentucky's major cause of serious accidents. Double speed was a contributing factor in 41 percent of the fatal accidents. Alcohol involvement contributed to one out of every five fatal accidents. Taking all accidents into account, other persistent causes of accidents noted in the report were driver inattention, defective brakes, tire failure and obstructed view.

"There are more cars on our roads than ever before," Elkins said, noting the fact that the number of miles driven in Kentucky jumped by more than one billion miles, "and that's reason enough to take precautions. If people would just slow down and obey signs, we would have a lot less fatal and injury accidents."

In addition to driving at a safe speed and not driving while intoxicated, the Kentucky State Police Commissioner recommends that

Reflecting pavement markers being installed

The state Transportation Cabinet has awarded three contracts to design the installation of reflecting pavement markers on selected roadway sections throughout the state.

The project is 100 percent federally funded and will help make Kentucky's highways as safe as possible," said state Transportation Secretary C. Leslie Dawson. "The small reflectors have been used in some areas to mark the center line, and are more easily seen than painted lines, especially at night, and during rainy or foggy weather."

The three contracts are: Carter, Elliott, Fleming, Group, Lewis; Mason, Nicholas and Howari

Eye Openers

By Dr. Robert F. Pretzsch, Ophthalmist

CATARACT GLASSES

Before surgery, the patient predominantly uses the eye most learns to use (BHT) eye again. Cataract glasses help. Adjustment to the glasses is an individual matter, and patience is important.

One of the things that must be relearned is flow to make spatial judgments such as pouring liquids into a cup, reaching for a doorknob, or shaking a friend's hand.

Even if one can wear a contact lens in the eye, there are times when cataract eyeglasses will be used. Daily wear lenses need daily cleaning and a period of adjustment before they can be worn successfully. Extended wear lenses must be removed every few weeks for cleaning. They tend to wear out and need to be replaced at frequent intervals. At those times the post-cataract patient will need to wear cataract eyeglasses.

One hint for all wearers of cataract eyeglasses: learn to move your head instead of your eyes when you want to see objects off to your side. This will also help to maintain your balance.
