Kentucky bees free of mites

Kentucky honey bees appear to be free of tracheal mite infestation, a disease which has caused great losses to bee colonies in Texas, New York, Florida, Louisiana, South Dakota and Nebraska since last July.

"We received the good news from the U.S. Department of Agriculture's bee lab in Maryland, where the testing was done," said Agriculture Commissioner David E. Boswell. "None of the more than 4,000 bees which were tested showed any signs of the mites.

"We did not expect the mite infestation in other states to pose a threat to Kentucky's $1.5 million honey and beeswax industry," the Commissioner added. "However, replacement bees and queens are often purchased from other areas of the country and bees are moved from state to state for crop pollination work and honey production. It was important for Kentucky's beekeepers to participate in this survey to find out if any diseased bees had gotten into the Commonwealth."

Catchings indicted

David Catchings, charged with second degree assault by striking Darrell Myers with a deadly weapon, has been indicted by the Nicholas County grand jury.

The incident occurred on Nov. 5, 1984.

The indictment, signed by Wanda Shrout, foreman, was handed down Aug. 16 in circuit court in the final report of the summer session. Bail was set at $5,000.

Changes in heavy vehicle use tax

The federal Heavy Vehicle Use Tax Return (Form 2290) must be filed by Aug. 31, 1985 on those taxable vehicles in operation on July 1 of this year. Effective July 1, 1985 only the taxable gross weight of each vehicle is considered in determining the tax. If a vehicle has a taxable gross weight of 55,000 pounds or more, it is subject to the heavy vehicle use tax, and a Form 2290 must be filed on the vehicle.

Taxpayers should note that the number of axles for their vehicles is no longer taken into consideration in determining the category of their vehicle for computing the heavy use tax.

Some truckers who did not pay this tax previously will find that they are now liable for the tax because of the taxable gross weight consideration. Coal truck operators, who may have been exempt from this tax based on the number of axles on their vehicle, could now be liable for the tax based on taxable gross weight.

Any person having questions about the Heavy Vehicle Use Tax or Form 2290 should call the IRS toll free at 1-800-424-1040.

More teachers for remediation in classrooms

Approximately 200 additional teachers will be employed in Kentucky this year as a result of the number of children needing remediation in both reading and math, Superintendent of Public Instruction Alice McDonald announced.

In the past, the number of teacher units allocated to local school districts depended on the number of students whose test scores in reading were substantially below mastery level for their class. Teacher aides were assigned for students whose scores showed a deficiency in math.

The new calculations show students deficient in both reading and math, so school districts will qualify for additional teacher units for instructional classes.

"These additional teachers will greatly improve remedial instruction throughout the state," McDonald said.

Registration for classes begins at MCC

Registration for fall semester classes at Maysville Community College began August 21.

Students returning to the college from the spring semester will register on Wednesday and Thursday, from 9-11:30 a.m. and 1:30-4 p.m. Students entering MCC for the first time and those who did not attend classes during the spring semester will register August 23 and 26 from 9-11:30 a.m. and 1:30-4 p.m.

This semester two night registration sessions have been scheduled. Those wishing to register at night may do so on August 26 and 28 from 6-8 p.m. Night registration can be for classes scheduled either during daytime or nighttime hours. Classwork for the 1985-86 fall semester will begin August 28.

Registration for numerous community service classes ranging from Beginning Guitar to News Writing to Quilting and a series of professional development nursing courses are also scheduled for this semester. Registration for these classes may be completed on the evening of August 26.

For further information about course offerings, admission, and registration, contact MCC at 759-7141.

Immunizations required by law

Back-to-school time usually brings to mind buying school supplies and being on time for the bus, but parents should not overlook immunizations required by Kentucky state law.

"Upon initial enrollment in Kentucky schools, children must have immunizations against five diseases - diphtheria-Pertussis, polio, measles and rubella," said Kathy Cahill, immunization program manager in the Department of Health Services. "This includes out-of-state transfer students."

Children in grades kindergarten through 12 must present an up-to-date immunization certificate, Cahill said. Certificates are available from local public health departments or from private physicians.

Although there are few cases of these diseases, it is important for children to be immunized against them, Cahill stressed.

"Children need the immunizations or the diseases will return," she said. These immunizations are very necessary and protect school children from once-common childhood diseases."

College Chorus class at MCC

Maysville Community College will again offer a one-credit-hour Community College Chorus which will meet on Thursdays at 7 p.m. in the college music room.

Will Kessler, musical director, Corlie Runyon Jones, will direct the musical organization. James Clarke will serve as accompanist for the group. Concerts are already scheduled to be performed in Lexington, Frankfort, and other regional sites as well as in the Maysville community. Those who participated in the course last year and new music enthusiasts are encouraged to register and participate with the MCC Chorus.

In addition, MUS 200, Introduction to Music, a course in music appreciation for non-music majors will also be taught this semester. Mrs. Jones will offer this three-credit-hour course on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and alternate Fridays at 10:00.

Schools place stronger emphasis on writing

When Kentucky's children return to their English classes next week, they will find some changes. Instead of being asked to write an essay on how they spent summer vacation, they will find their teachers placing a stronger emphasis on the process of writing.

The new process-oriented approach to the teaching of writing came about in response to the nationally recognized need for young people to develop better writing skills. When university researchers studied the problems and how successful writers overcome them, they found that conventional methods of workbook drills and grading completed essays were detrimental to the writing process.

In a process-oriented approach, teachers are there to intervene in, guide and direct the student's process. The teacher helps the student gather ideas, focus, organize, draft, revise, edit and then publish what has been written.

FORTY-FOUR Kentucky teachers were initiated into the process approach during a one-week seminar in July. The Kentucky Writing Institute, co-sponsored by the Kentucky Department of Education and the Kentucky Educational Foundation Inc., introduced teachers from all levels of education throughout the state to the basic principles and teaching strategies of the National Writing Project.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Alice McDonald said the process approach, as advocated by the National Writing Project, has proved effective in improving student skills.

"The project is significant for two reasons," McDonald said. "This is the first time the results of research on the university level have been made available to teachers who can use the information at the lower levels.

"In addition, the project has all levels of the educational community united in a consistent plan of attack upon the problem. This can only help the student.

THE NATIONAL Writing Project is already in effect in Jefferson County, where the University of Louisville and the Jefferson County Schools have created the Louisville Writing Project.

For transitional summer of 1986 each of the state's eight regional universities will host institutes similar to the Kentucky Writing Institute in order to train a cadre of teachers in the methods of the National Writing Project, McDonald said.

"I am very proud that Kentucky is facing this challenge head on," McDonald said. "Improvement is guaranteed."

Crop yield predictions good despite cutbacks

The Commonwealth's tobacco, corn, soybean, hay, alfalfa and sorghum crops are expected to yield well, but production for most of the commodities is forecast below the large, sometimes record-setting, crops of 1984.

The weather during this growing season has been very conducive to good crops in most areas of the Commonwealth," said Agriculture Commissioner David E. Boswell. "Farmers were able to plant early, have had rain when it was needed and are getting good harvest weather. The primary reason for lower production rates is that fewer acres were planted this year."

Burley tobacco production is forecast at 367 million pounds, down 21 percent from last year. Kentucky farmers planted 172,000 acres of burley, down 18 percent from 1984. An acre is expected to yield 2,250 pounds, compared to 2,340 last year.

The August production is 111 percent of Kentucky's effective quota.

For the eight-state Burley Belt, production is forecast at 583.3 million pounds, compared with 722.2 million pounds in 1984 and 481.4 million pounds in 1983.

Kentucky farmers are expected to harvest seven percent more corn for grain acres in 1985, with total production at 132.9 million bushels. This is five percent more than last year and more than three times the 1983 crop of 41.5 million bushels.

Yield is projected at 98 bushels per acre, compared to 106 bushels per acre last year.

"If the projected crop materialize," Commissioner Boswell pointed out, "the production will be the second highest in Kentucky, compared with the 1982 record of 134.5 million bushels."

The 1984 production totaled 7.65 billion bushels, while the PIK and drought-shortened crop of 1983 totaled 4.17 billion bushels.

Soybean production in the Commonwealth is projected at 32.7 million bushels, down 16 percent forecast at 387 million pounds, down 21 percent from last year. Kentucky farmers planted 172,000 acres of burley, down 18 percent from 1984. An acre is expected to yield 2,250 pounds, compared to 2,340 last year.

Sports In Kentucky

Based on figures available as of June 4, 1985, here is the unofficial overall record for Kentucky high school football coaches:

The newest additions are Dan Goble of Christian County (No. 15), Rhea Walton of Lexington Tates Creek (No. 16) and Jim Pointer, who announced his retirement at Lexington Lafayette last month (No. 23).

There are still some notable coaches names missing. Some of those whose victory records are unknown are Bill Hogg, Hardin; Paulie Miller of Louisville, the late Pete Greenwell of Shelbyville, Rice Mountjoy, Danville Boone County and Archie Powers from Hazard Perry County.
