Kay's Kitchen

By Kay Fisher

Recently someone sent me "The Nut Cookbook." It is filled with ideas and information about nuts, and also recipes for using nuts in everything from soups to desserts. I can't give you all of the information, but since we are interested in nutrition I will tell you that nuts are high in protein and niacin and are a source of other vitamins. They are also cholesterol free.

Here are some of the recipes:

CREAMY PEANUT SOUP
2 tablespoons margarine
½ cup finely chopped celery
¼ cup chopped onion
2 tablespoons flour
¼ cup peanut butter
2 cups milk
1 cup chicken broth
½ cup chopped peanuts, optional

Melt margarine in a 1½ quart saucepan. Add celery and onion. Saute until tender. Stir in flour, cook one minute. Stir in peanut butter until smooth. Gradually stir in milk and chicken broth. Simmer over low heat 12-15 minutes. Garnish with chopped peanuts. More salt may be added if desired.

VEGETABLE NUT PIE
1 9-inch unbaked pastry shell
2 tablespoons margarine
½ cup chopped onion
½ cup chopped sweet red pepper
4 cups coarsely chopped fresh spinach
¾ cup chopped pecan pieces
1¼ cup grated Swiss cheese
1¼ cup half and half
3 eggs
¼ teaspoon salt
Pepper

Prebake pastry shell at 425 degrees for 10 minutes.

Melt margarine in a large skillet. Add onion and red pepper. Saute until nearly tender. Stir in spinach and saute until wilted.

Sprinkle pecan pieces and cheese in bottom of pastry shell; spread spinach mixture over cheese layer.

Beat together half and half, eggs, salt and pepper. Pour into pie shell. Bake at 350 degrees for 35 minutes, or until puffy or a knife inserted in center comes out clean. Do not overbake. Slice and serve hot.

PECAN SWEET POTATO RING
¼ cup packed brown sugar
2 tablespoons margarine
½ cup chopped pecans
1 can (18 oz.) vacuum packed sweet potatoes
1 cup milk
2 eggs
1 teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon allspice
½ teaspoon salt

Combine brown sugar and margarine, spoon into bottom of a well-greased one quart ring mold. Spoon pecans over sugar mixture.

In blender combine sweet potatoes, milk, eggs, salt and spices. Blend until smooth. Spoon into prepared mold. Place mold in pan of hot water and bake at 325 degrees for one hour and 10 minutes, or until knife inserted in center comes out clean. Loosen edges and invert onto serving platter.

Co-operation moves mountains of snow

Smoot termed the storm "the worst since November 1950. Nothing moved here for a week," he said. He continued, "the wind is the worst part. It keeps drifting. We clean it up and it (the roads) gets covered again". "We've had about 500 calls from people who were sick, needed help and/or transportation".

The county road department, under the supervision of John Ecton, had three trucks with plows, one bulldozer, a loader and grader trucks on the roads. Also private dozer operators were hired. They were David Hardin and son, Allen Waugh, Billy Ed Hunter and Donald Cassidy.

Volunteer James R. Anderson cleared two county roads with his tractor, and also worked on the streets in Carlisle. He found a man who had been stuck for about five or six hours on the Headquarters Road, and cleaned a path for him to the Harrison County line.

Smoot said that numerous times the trucks would get hung up in drifts and the loader would have to be called in to pull them out. One road in particular was Concord. Locust Grove, East Union and Concord Roads were especially hard hit, as was Moorefield which many consider to be the worst area in the county.

By Friday, according to Smoot, they had pretty well covered most of the county. All roads were opened, some with one lane traffic.

There was no water in the Moorefield section which aggravated an already bad situation. That section is on the Sharpsburg Water District. Water was restored Thursday around 3:00 p.m. Mrs. Sammie Dailey who lives on Ky. 36 near the Bush Church Road, credits Herbert Bowling and Jerry Tabor with investigating the situation, determined to see that water was restored.

The state road department, supervised by Wavel Fryman, had two graders, one end-loader and three trucks with plows in operation on the 18 state roads in the county. They worked eight men 24 hours a day, six of whom were drivers. They were split up into two crews which were allowed to work 20 hours each. Frankfort sent two men and a grader Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 13 to assist the department. Kentucky Stone Company of Flemingsburg sent a loader Friday night.

According to Fryman, the trucks started out first, when they couldn't go any farther, one of the graders was sent out. It also couldn't handle the snow drifts and the end-loader had to finish the job.

Saturday morning Fryman reported that the roads were in fairly decent shape, some with one lane traffic in spots. Also crews were widening up the shoulders of the roads Saturday. At that time they were working in the Moorefield section. They had yet to cover Jacktown, Carpenter, Walnut Grove, Hardy, 32 to Headquarters, Short Pike, Mt. Mariah, Lake Road, Ky. 27 (part of Gravel Road), Cane Run and East Union Roads. Monday morning they were working on Ky. 32.

Thursday the Bath County Sheriff set up a roadblock at the intersection of Ky. 11 and Ky. 36 until roads could be cleared. Blowing snow from drifts which lined the road, was still cutting down visibility. There was a furniture truck, a lime truck and a pickup truck a short distance from the intersection that were caught in drifts that almost completely covered them. They were finally pulled out Thursday by the National Guard.

Gayle Vanlandingham, City Superintendent and city employees began scraping up and hauling snow from parking spaces on Main Street Friday morning. Bobby Crockett's carwash lot and Reid and-Vice's lot behind the store were used as dumping sites.

Jeffery Jefferson operated the backhoe. They continued the snow removal operation Friday with the help of a National Guard truck. Saturday night a crew started about 10:00 p.m. clearing snow from in front of the Methodist, Baptist and Christian Churches on Chestnut and Locust Streets.

Jeff Randolph and Ed Jefferson assisted the city in their four-day snow clearing operation.

Volunteer Danny Hardwick, using his tractor with a 10 foot blade, cleaned driveways for many houses on Cliffway Drive, the Old Paris Pike, Nate Young's house and at the Hedgecrest Horse Farm at the corner of U.S. 68 and Headquarters Road. He also worked on driveways and streets in town. Linda Hardwick, Danny's mother, said, "he didn't ask for a penny, he just wanted to do it". Some people did pay him and he appreciated it." Dick Dailey also cleaned some driveways in town.

Volunteer manhours played a large part in helping the city and county pull through the aftermath of the storm.

Vanlandingham said they had to repair a break in a water line on Turneman Avenue Monday, but that thankfully no breaks or water problems had occurred since then. They also cleaned snow from in front of Anna Mae Henry's home on Turneman Avenue after the death of her mother, Mrs. Dove Thompson.

The entire city police force has aided persons needing rides to and from work at the hospital and nursing home, and to places of business. Also those needing medicine, a way to the doctor's office, and numerous other transportation requests.

Tuesday night, even with chains on the police cruisers, there were some streets they could not negotiate. Allen Earlywine used his four-wheel drive truck throughout the night as backup for the cruisers. Earlywine said that they had had so many calls that he really didn't know how to approximate the number.

The local National Guard unit —"our angels in green"— were a hard working team that assisted in all sections of the county day and night to help with road clearing and to answer calls for help.

PSG Wayne Capps, Unit Administrator of Co. D, 301st Engineer Battalion in Carlisle said Thursday afternoon that he had been having a hard time getting his men to rest. He said that they felt that there was so much to do that there wasn't time to sleep. Thursday morning about 3:30 Capps and several other Guards were still working on the Moorefield Road. When total exhaustion set in, they finally pulled the loader off the road at the Moorefield post office and all slept in one of the trucks until 6:30 a.m.

Thursday they had two bulldozers in the Headquarters, Saltwell, Barterville section and one dozer on Dixie Highway; also two end-loaders in the Moorefield section. Sunday they finished clearing and hauling snow from the middle of town.

SSG Jim Galbraith told of taking a registered nurse out the Locust Grove Road to the home of a man who is a diabetic, and was in need of an insulin shot. The Guards learned of the man's medical need from a man who had been talking to him on a CB radio.

Also a woman was taken to the hospital Thursday who thought she had broken a bone when a piece of firewood fell on her foot. Another hospital call involved a man who had recently had a hernia-operation, and was in extreme pain. Dr. Osias Villaflor was taken to the hospital for that emergency also. Galbraith said they were out day and night taking nurses to and from work at the hospital and nursing home.

They have also come to the aid of farmers who needed roads cleared to get to fields where hay was kept so they could feed their cattle, and also to the fields where the cattle were. If it were not for the Guards, the Mercury issue of February 14 would indeed have been very late, since it was impossible for newspaper's station wagon to get to Cynthiana. PSG Capps dispatched a driver, Joe Jennings and vehicle about 3 p.m. Jennings returned about 7:30 with the finished newspapers.

Galbraith's comment summed it all up —"you get tired, but when you see you've helped somebody, it's rewarding".

"Green Angels"

Record keeping

satisfy the record keeping requirement in two ways for a vehicle that the taxpayer regularly uses directly in the business of farming, such as a truck. Farmers may either (1) keep records of personal use of a vehicle, or (2) keep no records and treat 80 percent of the use of a vehicle as business use and 20 percent as personal use. These rules are available to farmers who receive more than 70 percent of their gross income (excluding income from passive investment sources) from farming. Even though these rules do not apply to automobiles used by farmers, such automobiles may be covered by the special rule for sales and service automobiles described below.

No personal use — Taxpayers who use a vehicle in a trade or business need not keep a log if the vehicle is kept at the employer's business premises during non-business hours and the vehicle is not used for personal purposes (other than de minimis personal use such as a stop for lunch).

Commuting — Taxpayers who for business reasons require employees to use business vehicles for commuting are generally not subject to the record keeping requirement if the following conditions are satisfied. First, the employer allows no other personal use of the vehicle by employees (other than de minimis personal use). Second, the employer accounts for the commuting use by including an amount in the employee's income for each day the vehicle is used for commuting.

Sales and service — Taxpayers who spend most of a normal business day using a vehicle, for example, to call on customers or clients, make deliveries or visit job sites, may satisfy the record keeping requirement in one of two ways. They may keep records of personal use of a vehicle. In the alternative, they may keep no records and either (1) treat 70 percent of the use of the vehicle as business use and 30 percent as personal use if such vehicle is an automobile or otherwise designed primarily for personal use, or (2) treat 80 percent of the use of the vehicle as business use and 20 percent as personal use if such vehicle is a truck or other vehicle designed primarily for commercial use. However, these rules are not available to taxpayers who customarily spend most of their normal business day in an office or similar setting. A farmer may be able to use this rule for an automobile used to make several stops during a normal business day directly in connection with the business of farming.

will also receive plaques signed by Gov. Martha Layne Collins.

Scholastic competition in the Golden 100 program will consist of standardized tests in English, mathematics, natural science, social science and the best entry essays. Winners will receive trophies and their high schools will receive plaques for permanent display.

Mrs. Jesse Stuart of Greenup County will again serve as honorary chairman of the Golden 100 competition. Speakers at an awards banquet on the campus will include Murray State president, Dr. Kala M. Stroup.

County to get $3,500 to clear roads of snow

Governor Martha Layne Collins has announced that 59 Kentucky counties participating in the Cooperative Agreement Program with the Transportation Cabinet will each receive $3,500 to clear county roads of ice and snow. Nicholas County is among those named.

"It is vital that these county roads be cleared for the safety of our people and so that businesses and schools can resume normal activity," said Gov. Collins.

Legislation was passed during the 1984 General Assembly that allows a cooperative agreement through which the state and county work together to meet county road needs. The program is optional to any Kentucky county willing to contribute three percent of their total anticipated revenue into a statewide emergency fund. For the current 1984-85, 59 counties have opted to participate in the program.

"The paperwork has been processed and the participating counties will be receiving their checks in the immediate future," said State Transportation Secretary Floyd G. Poore. Secretary Poore added that while $3,500 would not cover the total cost of snow and ice removal, "It will assist in partial payment."

CONTRACT AWARDED FOR BRIDGE PAINTING

The Transportation Cabinet has awarded a contract for bridge painting in Nicholas County.

ATS Industrial Painting of Houston, Texas received a contract for bridge cleaning and painting in Nicholas, Greenup and Carter counties. The contract covers cleaning and painting of the bridge over the TTI Railroad and Scrub Grass Creek, located on KY 32, the Carlisle-Flemingsburg Road, 4.9 miles from the northern city limits of Carlisle in Nicholas County.

The project is part of the state's 1985 bridge repair program.

City candidates

The Nicholas County Clerk's office announces that all mayoral and city council candidates must file their candidacy by Feb. 27, 1985.

Ky. Housing Corporation to provide $250,000 loan

Kentucky Housing Corporation (KHC) is giving the Kentucky Association for Community Action (KACA) a $250,000 loan to finance a statewide Emergency and Home Energy Conservation Program. Responsible for program coordination and training for 23 local Community Action Agencies throughout the state, KACA will utilize the KHC loan to provide below market interest rate home improvement loans to eligible families through local Community Action Agencies.

"Initiated by Governor Collins and administered through KHC, this program is a perfect illustration of cooperation with existing entities within the housing delivery system," stated Lynn Luallen, KHC's executive director.

Loans made to families will be repaid primarily with low income funds for those Kentuckians with lower incomes. KACA will oversee administration of the rehabilitation program through a grant provided by KHC. Local Community Action Agencies will take applications, determine eligibility, prepare work write-ups and calculate loan amounts based on cost of work to be done. Community Action Agencies work primarily with low income persons and are funded by a state administered Community Services Block Grant.

Of the 23 local agencies, 18, including Lexington Fayette UCAA, have expressed interest in the program. "We feel this is a good representation and will enable us to reach people in every section of the state," said Jacob Blackburn of KACA.

KY. FARMERS CROPS PRODUCE $2.04 BILLION, UP 49 PERCENT

KENTUCKY farmers produced crops during the 1984 crop year valued at 2.04 billion dollars, up 49 percent from 1983 but one percent below the 1982 value. The increase resulted from larger production for all crops except peaches and oats. Crop production in 1983 was sharply reduced due to the Payment-In-Kind Program and weather.

Tobacco ranked first among crops in Kentucky, contributing 41 percent of the state's total value of production.
