Topic of the 1985 contest is "The Impact of Tobacco Imports on the Tobacco Grower."

Well over 50 percent of all FFA chapters in Kentucky are participating, reflecting the awareness of horticulture in Kentucky as the majority of the state's main cash crop.

Every county in Kentucky is part of an FFA region, and all of the state's 120 counties are to some degree involved in horticulture production.

Importation of foreign-grown horticulture into the United States has become a major concern of growers. Farmer organizations in all of the tobacco states are urging government action to limit leaf imports.

Teachers and chapter advisors are now evaluating the essays that have been submitted. From the hundreds of entries under study, the selection are being chosen and will be placed in chapters and regional competitions. The state winner will receive a $200 award, regional winners $50 savings bonds, and chapter winners will be awarded travel certificates.

Regional winners and the state winner will be announced and awards presented at the FFA convention in June.

Objectives of the contest are to foster understanding of horticulture in the economic life of the community, state and nation; by encouraging young people to learn about tobacco history, production, manufacturing and marketing.

demand, especially with cutting clover. Many horse farms are finding first cutting clover.

If a producer would want to pursue foreign production the most important ingredient in this program is management. Getting the seed to the correct level is the first step. For grass the 75 level of 8.4 is considered optimum. In alfalfa production the optimum level is 8.8. Recommended high yielding varieties of seed can mean the difference between losing money and a nice profit. Some alfalfa varieties are yielding up to eight tons per acre. Yes, there was some fertilizer that had to be supplemented into the program. Weevil management isn't as difficult as it once was.

Cutting and baling are places quality can be controlled. Baling or baling too dry can matter leaves and thus reduce quality and weight.

As with any product, marketing is very important. Searching out those farms that desire your product requires some homework and persistence. Let them know you are worthy of their trust that you can deliver a quality product and that you are in the business to deliver.

The market potential is real, our last 1984 Larry Tischer, Clay Sapp and Courtney Cain.

Eye Openers

When Cataracts Begin to Form

The first signs of a cataract are blurring vision, lights which appear distorted in shape, overlapping images or words on a printed page, and images which appear brighter when seen with one eye than with the other.

Cataracts — the clouding of the lens which allows light to reach the inside of the eye and makes vision possible — are sometimes inherited, or may be caused by a traumatic eye injury, but the most common cause is the natural process of aging.

Cataracts rarely mature in both eyes at the same time. Therefore, it is so important to monitor visual changes in the "good eye" as it is to check the progress of a ripening cataract in the other.

Changes in your glasses can help you see clearer until the cataract is ready to be removed. The formation of a mature cataract can take a while. Meanwhile, you may be especially sensitive to sunlight. Properly prescribed sunglasses can alleviate a lot of the discomfort.

Once the fully opaque lens is removed, you have choices to make. Do you want to wear post-operative contact lenses to give you clearer vision? Would you prefer daily wear contact lenses, or extended wear lenses? Or a lens can actually be implanted in the eye during surgery. There are pros and cons to all these methods of treatment. Discuss them with your eye care professional.
