appropriate for planning. Some counties in the state are not experiencing the same trends, and local planning should be based on local figures," Divento said.

JUST LOOKING is the numbers doesn't tell the whole story. When the numbers are connected to the specific individuals they represent, the picture becomes more serious. The state's tax base is disappearing faster than the need for new services.

"Net out-migration during the early '80s hints of a return to the years when Kentucky was an exporter of its most valuable resource — economically productive people.

"Studies of those leaving Kentucky indicate that by and large they are more educated, have higher status occupations and have higher incomes than those who remain in the state," Divento said.

EKU reschedules summer term

In a move designed to better accommodate area public school teachers, administrators and students, Eastern Kentucky University officials have announced plans to move the starting date for the 1985 summer term back one week.

Under the new schedule, summer registration will be held Monday, June 17 and classes will begin Tuesday, June 18. The summer term will end Aug. 8.

EKU President Hanly Funderburk said the university's decision to set back the summer school dates reflects an awareness and concern for the problems adverse winter weather has caused school personnel in elementary and secondary education.

OMB hijack angers anglers

Kentucky Afield

Thousands of Kentucky boaters and sportfishermen were angered last year to additional user-fee taxes will be "up the creek without a paddle" if a position recently adopted by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) is not reversed.

In a budget decision last month, OMB has decided against distributing over $100 million in annual user fees which Congress authorized last year. Under Public Law 98-369, which created a new "Wallop-Breaux" Sport Fishing and Boating Trust Fund Account, the monies collected from excise taxes on fishing tackle and motor boat fuels are required to be returned to the states as matching grants for boating and sportfishing projects. This user-pays approach to funding conservation and recreation programs is a long-standing administration policy now being flouted by OMB.

According to OMB's astonishing "impoundment" decision, U.S. Senator Malcolm Wallop (R-WY) said, "Such funds should not be hijacked in an overzealous attempt to reduce the deficit." He termed any diversion of the funds "a misrepresentation to millions of boaters and fishermen who continue to pay and support user fees" and "a breach of Executive responsibility to the will of Congress."

IF OMB is successful in freezing Wallop-Breaux funds it will have a disastrous impact on Kentucky recreational fishing and boating programs. According to Peter W. Pfeiffer, Director of Fisheries, Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources, the "freeze" would cost Kentucky an additional one million dollars per year and would mean that the expanded development of access sites along Kentucky's streams and lakes, fishing piers in department-owned waters, fish habitat development in lakes and coldwater streams, creation of several new lakes at our wildlife management areas, increased technical guidance to lake owners, and increased management of crappie and black bass, the two kinds of fish most sought by anglers in Kentucky, will not be possible.

The National Sportfishing and Boating Enhancement Committee, a new organization of some 30 fishing and boating organizations is opposing the OMB "hijacking." The Committee, which represents approximately five million outdoorsmen, worked for seven years to pass the Wallop-Breaux legislation and is obviously not taking kindly to seeing user funds taken for other purposes. The American Fisheries Society (AFS), 115 year-old organization of fisheries scientists, is an active member of the Sport Fishing and Boating Enhancement Committee.
