The last notch nears

The tobacco program has been on a collision course for years. Profitability from beef cattle has been on the decline since the peak years of the mid-70s. Followed by hogs, followed by almost anything we raise for profit in Kentucky, especially Nicholas County.

Farmers have a problem and it threatens to get worse, if there's no equitable solution to the dilemma facing burley growers. For example, it's now being predicted that poultry consumption will exceed beef consumption by the end of the century, if not before. The reasons? Cheaper prices and reports that red meat may present a health hazard, in some cases.

In 1970, the average per person consumption of poultry was a featherweight 42 pounds compared to a bullish 113.6 pounds of beef. Last year, the average American ate 66 pounds of poultry and an estimated 77.4 pounds of beef. Higher prices for most everything in the late 70s as a result of the world oil situation caused Americans to look for less expensive alternatives to beef. The health issue also plays a small role in the shift from red to white meat. Feeling people still prefer a steak to a chicken sandwich, all we have to do is narrow the gap in the price differential and beef and pork will rebound.

But how? Narrowing the gap, it seems to us, means lower prices at the stock yards and still another setback for the small farmer who is barely afloat at best.

Kentucky's climate is not considered conducive to raising chickens, profitably, on a year round basis, even if financing were no object. And green peppers are not the immediate answer as a replacement for lost tobacco income.

To paint an even bleaker picture, Nicholas County terrain is simply not suited to continuous production of crops which could help offset the loss of revenue from burley sales.

The tobacco program and associated industries must be preserved, in some form, for the immediate future. If not as we now know it, then as a lesser but more economically stable source of income. Anything is better than nothing. And at the moment nothing is what most farm families around here have to look forward to.

In the meantime, we can hope to attract that small factory so sorely needed not only to spur the lagging economy but save it, actually. Belt tightening is slowly approaching the last notch.

Dam it, let's do it

I may have been barking up the wrong tree all along, which is to say that John Burke, among others, may have had the right idea all along: With farming failing on hard times why not let them build the Falmouth Dam and get in on the tourist action around here?

Course, that would mean apologizing to Cong. Gene Snyder for all those nasty things I've said each time he pushed for its passage.

No, there must be another answer. Like, enlarging Lake Carnico. Or, better yet, turning the county into a resort area of lots and lots of mid-sized fishing and boating lakes.

With the permission of the State of Minnesota and a certain butter maker, we could borrow the slogan, Land of Lakes and attract thousands to our shores. Larger impoundments would have cottages. Think what that would do for the building industry. It would be a boon for fast food restaurants. (Maybe McDonald's and Pizza Hut would see fit to opening franchises.)

With the throngs flocking in during the fishing season, a restaurant specializing in fried catfish, bush puppies and the like should fare well, much the same as Boe & Charlie's near Kentucky Lake, familiar to those of you who have ventured into the far western part of our state. Possibilities are limitless!

And instead of sharing the wealth with all neighboring counties that would be involved if the Falmouth Dam is built, we could keep it all to ourselves!

Gosh! to think of it, that's (a lake) something we can do with our abundance on the old Paris Road, if tobacco becomes a thing of the past. Dam up a hollow and pray for rain.

For the idea (of turning Nicholas County into a fishing resort) to work, however, certain fishermen would have to be barred. Folks like Taylor Mathers, Earl Hamm, Jake Kerlywine, Billy Thomas and Bill Padgett, to name a few. The way they catch fish there'd be none left for the tourists!

Okay. I dream a lot. Got a better idea?

You're never too old to learn. And unless someone was pulling my leg, I just found out that the reason you see so many skunks killed on the highways this time of year is that they've been in hibernation all winter and are more mindful of mating than careful in crossing. All of which should have a lot of people feel let unsaid here.

Last week's column about the 1930 issue of the Musketeer Review drew considerable telephone comment — and even a brief visit from the paper's first editor, Harry Galbraith. Mr. G. remembers that Supt. E.E. Plunkett, who conceived the idea of starting the publication in the fall of 1929, offered a $5 fall to the person who suggested the best name. John Tapp, who still makes his home in Carlisle, was the lucky winner. A buck was a lot of money in those days and we're told Mr. Tapp kept it for a long time before it "burned a hole in his pocket."

Mr. G. can't remember just when the school paper ceased publication the first time, but does recall Mrs. Lucille Pumphrey soliciting an ad from him when he operated Galbraith's Grocery in Paris for the first issue of the second start-up. He had his store from 1947-63.

Against any team except Georgetown or St. John's I'd give UK a chance. Sorry. Their improved play in the last few games, however, does give fans something to look forward to next November, assuming it carries over to the 1985-86 squad. And that there aren't too many defections.

Even James Blackmon may have found his notch, though I seriously doubt he'll be a Wildcat after this year. Pity for the program but James has things to prove and may not have the patience to wait his turn at UK. That figures to be another year away. — EAW

Heavy response to school board meeting

To The Carlisle Mercury:

Being concerned students of Nicholas County High School, we are clearly aware of the controversy surrounding the discussion of the athletic program at the school board meeting last Monday, March 11.

It has become apparent that some parents feel that athletics should come before academics. May we, the concerned students, remind these parents that athletics are extracurricular activities. Before any "sports complexes" are built, these people have to get their priorities straight.

The point was brought up that sports participants don't get enough recognition. Do honor roll students get school jackets with letters on them? Do they get big pictures in the newspaper? Today's society has made a hero out of the basketball star and a nobody out of the one that stays home and studies. How much more recognition can you get?

How do parents hope to raise a well-rounded individual with athletics as its nucleus? In the future, what good is varsity sports going to be to the child? The time will come in life when some people will wish they had stressed their child's education over his athletic prowess. Given, playing team sports encourages teamwork, but it doesn't and should not take the place of an education.

Last Monday's school board meeting brought up a great deal of interesting suggestions. We would like to address as many of these suggestions as possible. Having an athletics complex, a new locker room and more equipment for the gym would be really nice. To obtain these items takes money and we could just imagine the looks on the faces of the people who would like to improve the athletics program after they find out their taxes will be raised to pay for them. Before thinking of building a bigger, better gym, they should consider the fact that the one we have now isn't filled to capacity on game nights. What a waste when money could be used to buy new typewriters, shop equipment, improve the library, and so on.

The possibility of interested persons outside the school system to assist in coaching would hurt the athletics program even more. The "interested persons" most likely would be the ones who have children participating in the athletics program so it is totally obvious whose children would be playing the most. Mr. Lonnie Bryant was correct in stating that parents should not be allowed at practice sessions. The coach has enough to do already without having to deal with the interference of parents. We feel that he makes an unbiased decision as to who plays and how long they play contrary to those whose philosophy is that it's not a matter of winning or losing, it's how long your kid gets to play.

We know that most of the 45 people who attended the meeting are "tired" of the whole program. We too are tired — tired of seeing academics take a back seat to athletics.

Sincerely yours,
Brian Watkins,
Mark McConkey,
Marty Setthers

To The Carlisle Mercury:

I am a 15 year old sophomore and I attend Nicholas County High. I am also a member of the Nicholas County Lady Jackets.

From all that has been going on lately, I can't seem to keep quiet about this any longer. I've been listening to people talk and I've read the newspapers too.

I've been playing basketball for two years and I don't know what it would be like to have had the chance to play on a Junior High team. I have experienced both pain and pleasure throughout these two years in basketball. In all situations I feel I was learning to play in the game of life.

One source of this problem is lack of interest in doing extracurricular activities. Also size-wise we must use every available person interested.

I know the Lady Jackets haven't been at their best the past two years, but the coach is not the first person to run and complain about. I feel if the players showed enough interest and ambition we would all be "motivated" much more. I feel we should all strive to do the best of our ability. I think we should all be aware of our ambitions.

Our coach has shown complete interest throughout the season. Through all of the practices and games we have all kept our heads on straight and not laid all of the responsibility and blame on one person. We have all shared the blame.

I know from experience, if you want to do something badly enough, you must work to achieve your goal. I've been discouraged several times after a game when I didn't do well or set a chance to

The ARC still has work to do

by R.C. Van Cleve

What do you do when you find yourself caught in the philosophical trap that you have so carefully constructed, honed and perfected through a lifetime of writing?

For want of a better idea, I'm going to emulate the politicians by claiming I am duty bound to do the best job I can in representing the interests of my constituents. The situation at hand concerns an editorial stand of the Lexington Herald-Leader that the Appalachian Regional Commission should be abolished by Congress as President Reagan wishes in his budget proposal.

The Herald-Leader has some bread and butter in its argument:

"The ARC has done some useful things for Appalachia — most notably the building of roads, schools, sewer and water projects, and the like. However, these same projects probably could have been built at less cost to taxpayers if the Appalachian states had shouldered their own responsibilities, rather than looking to Washington.

"More important, the ARC's unmodest successes in improving the infrastructure of Appalachia must be balanced against the modest waste that has been the trademark of its 20 years of existence. Spending $166,000 on a lavish 20th anniversary celebration, complete with gold and silver medals for the agency's political friends, is just the recent example of that waste, although it did set some sort of hallmark for pure stupidity."

In principle, it's hard for me to quarrel with the above position of the Herald-Leader.

But, let's bear more of their case: "Most important, however, is that the ARC in 20 years has made little or no progress toward achieving its original goal; to alleviate Appalachian poverty by developing a diversified economy in the region. It hasn't solved Appalachia's underlying problems; it has simply masked them under a mountain of federal aid. (Of course, another trait of bureaucracy is never to work yourself out of a job by solving the original problem.)"

I do take issue with this last paragraph that minimizes the progress made in solving the original problem. But even that is open to argument about who decided the progress and the extent of same.

The times seem numberless to me when I have suggested editorially in substance if not identical words that the Herald-Leader used: "...at less cost to taxpayers if Appalachian states had shouldered their own responsibilities..."

There always is a time in life when a man must call upon his friend or neighbor for help. That is exactly what Appalachia did in calling upon the government to help do a job that was too big for the area itself.

About the program made: I speak of 42 years of editorializing on the problems of Kentucky and my fellow citizens, the first 18 years of it in Harlan County from 1942 to 1960, and the balance of the time in Frankfort.

I do have a selfish interest in ARC. I was one of the original members of the old Eastern Kentucky Regional Planning Commission appointed by Lt. Gov. Harry Lee Waterfield following the disastrous 1957 Flood in Eastern Kentucky. This organization was the parent of ARC, created in 1961 or 1962, which makes it older than the Herald-Leader says.

All a person has to do to understand progress is to have driven the roads of that area in the 1940s, lived where the open sewers emptied into the river and facilities were just better than crude in many cases. The road system is not complete, a real necessity for development.

Gates' heroics save 24 lives; Kendall, Guthrie killed in action

A new chapter for Nicholas County library service was written in Frankfort March 15 as Joe F. Conley, treasurer of the county library board, accepted from Governor Edward T. Breathitt a check for part of the $59,340 in federal matching funds allocated by the State Department of Libraries for a new library in Carlisle. The new structure will also house the headquarters of the Buffalo Trace Region.

William Smith, administrator for the new home for the elderly, states there are now 17 residents of the home.

Fred Jones, Jones equipment owner and operator, accepted delivery of a new bulldozer last week. The Jones job was cleaning land on the Elgin Clark farm near Moorefield. Jones now owns four bulldozers and one motor grader-scraper equipment. This makes almost $100,000 worth of equipment brought into the county to do conservation work through the efforts of the Nicholas County Soil Conservation District.

"This has made a believer out of me! I didn't know so many people read the ads," said Jewel Vice of Reid, Vice and Green, while in the Mercury office Tuesday morning (placing another ad). Mr. Vice's ad in last week's Mercury resulted in numerous sales of plywood and pre-finished panel board. Some had cut the ad out of the paper and brought it into the store.

Twenty-three Nicholas County 4-H members, one of the largest groups ever, gathered at the courthouse March 16 to participate in the county speech event to compete for the honor of representing Nicholas County at the district speech contest to be held later this spring. Winners were Ann Burden, junior girls division; Joe Burden, junior boys division; Mary Ellen Stone, senior girls division; D.W. Booth, senior boys division.

For God, country and my battered station wagon... long may they reign

Visiting in Detroit many years ago, I was driven past the Ford Motor Co. by a relative who worked there. I was impressed with the size of the place, but something caught my eye that I did not understand.

"The huge parking lots where workers left their cars while building Henry's latest models were filled with Chevies, Plymouths, Dedsotas, Hudson Terraplanes and Studebakers.

I think I commented aloud it at the time, saying something like "How do these workers have the nerve to buy another brand of car when their bread and butter comes from Ford?"

"It's the American way," or some other stock answer came to me.

Now those same worker's are driving Hondas and Subarus and have an autographed photo of Lee Iacocca dangling from their rearview mirrors and bumper stickers that read "Buy American."

Even Iacocca, who warned that easing restrictions against auto imports from Japan could cost hundreds of thousands of jobs, put Mitsubishi engines in the best cars he makes. Confucious say: "Man who lives with geisha girl should not throw chopsticks at those making love in the rumble seat of a Mazda."

Those of us who have religiously stood by Detroit-made machines through it all know that those sassy little Japanese imports are far too fragile for the great American pothole. The dude jumping into the air shouting, "Oh, what a feeling, Toyota!" just don't repair half after three months of waiting for parts.

Our son who has been in love with his Toyota Celica Supreme, got a hood ornament the size of a silver dollar as a Christmas present (not from me): It cost $60. Then he drove into a pothole that cracked his wheel and put a big knot on his tire. Me and my Ford cried for him. But not too much.

Those wonderful folks who gave us Pearl Harbor invented the kamakazi, the bantai and the samuri and believe in free trade. And if you happen to not agree they will furnish you with a sleek little hari-kari model — at a price that will curl your hair — to fall into a pothole and go out in Japanese style.

I still pledge allegiance to Detroit and to the lemons for which it stands. One Buick indivisible, with Mustangs and Cadillacs for all.

From the Arkansas State Plant Board News comes this "Farmer's Prayer." Each farmer should face Washington, uncover his head and utter this prayer a dozen times or so:

"As Farmers and Ranchers, Dear God, please give us wisdom and patience to understand why a pound of T-bone steak at $2.50 is high, but a three-ounce cocktail at $1.75 is not. And a 56-cent cup of soft drink at the ball game is cheap but a 15-cent glass of milk for breakfast is inflationary. And, Lord, help me to understand why $5.00 for a ticket to the local movie is a bargain, but $3.50 for a 60 pound bushel of wheat is unthinkable. Cotton is too high at 60 cents a pound, but a $20 cotton shirt is on sale for $18.50. And corn is too steep at two cents worth in a box of flakes, but the flakes are just right at 50 cents a serving. And also, Lord, help me to understand why I have to give an easement to the gas company, so they can cross my property with their gas lines, and then double my price for their gas. And also, Dear God, help me to understand the consumer, who drives by my field and scoffs at me for driving a $70,000 piece of equipment, that he built, so he could make money and drive down that right-of-way that they took from me to build a road, so that he could go hunting and skiing. Thank you, God, for your past guidance and help, and please help me to make sense of it all."

Or maybe this story will help put the farmers' problems in the right perspective.

The farmer's tractor was blocking the country road when a man in a fancy sports car pulled up.

"I'll be out of your way in a minute," the farmer said. "That's a pretty spiffy car you're driving, mister."

The guy in the sports car was proud.

"It sure is the best I could buy," he said. "It's got a Belchfire V-engine, stereo deck and FM, Corinthian leather seats, air, metal-flake paint, electric seats, electric windows, remote control mirrors, imported steel-belted radials, automatic sunroof, stainless steel wire wheels, five-speed transmission, heavy duty suspension. You name just about anything they can put on a car, and it's on this one."

"What did it cost?"

"It set me back $35,000," the man said. "How much was your tractor?"

"That's what I can't figure out," the farmer said. "It cost me $100,000 and the plow was extra."

Someone handed me an assortment of answers taken from science students' test papers. Here are a few examples, nothing changed by me mainly because I can't improve on their suggestions:

— Benjamin Franklin produced electricity by rubbing two cats backwards.

— Three kinds of blood vessels are: Arteries, veins and caterpillars.

— English sparrows and starlings eat the farmer's grain and sell his corpse.

— A triangle which has an angle of 135 degrees is called an obscene triangle.

— Blood flows down one leg and up the other.

— The human is more intelligent than the beast because the human brain has more convolutions.

— For dog bite: Bleed the wound and rape the victim in a blanket for shock.

— For asphyxiation: Apply artificial respiration until the patient is dead.

— To remove dust from the eye: Pull the eye over the nose.

— RM —

Then there was this ad in a newspaper that said space was available in the "intelligent" building office building called Skyline City. And that ad brought out a big response of: What the heck is the difference between an intelligent building and one not so smart?

Here's the explanation given by the fellow who placed the ad: "An 'intelligent' building means a building that is wired for voice and data communications so that a tenant can subscribe to voice or data services." It also means the building's "life-support systems" can run without human attention. Like buildings housing bureaucrats in Washington, I guess.

A smart building also has been wired so that its elevators, heating and air conditioning systems are computerized and automated, thus requiring less maintenance.

My office is in an "intelligent" building. My chair and typewriter are wired and we leave the doors open for good voice communications. We even have a "life support system" that runs without human attention, just like those classy Virginia Slims — if you remember to keep it filled with water and put some coffee in it once in a while.

Onward, Upward.

play. I never did blow up. I went home and thought about why the problem occurred and then talked it over with my parents. Everytime I came up with the same conclusion, "The only person to blame was myself." The reason I didn't get to play was because I didn't show up for practice or I didn't do well because I wasn't taking the game seriously enough. This is the one thing all players are guilty of.

I believe before I pointed fingers at anyone I would think about all of the variables. Name calling and character attacks never achieve anything but hard feelings. Perhaps if such name calling and amateur criticism were to stop, athletics would become what it was supposed to be — fun.

To The Carlisle Mercury:

In response to the article printed in last week's paper concerning the board meeting last Monday night I would like to make a statement.

First I would like to commend Janie Duncan for the superb job she did in covering the story. She was quite busy getting all that information down.

Next I would like to say we should be proud of our board of education in the way they handled the meeting and the manner they all conducted themselves in.

Finally, I would like to clarify that all of the people that attended the meeting were not there to complain about Mr. Kersey. Several were his supporters, but had not asked to speak.

Thank you,
Carol Fryman

To The Carlisle Mercury:

After reading the Mercury's coverage of last week's school board meeting, I feel that it's time that we, the citizens of Nicholas County, examine our priorities concerning education.

Losing the game of life can be devastating.

Sincerely,
Martha Mitchell Cox

To The Carlisle Mercury:

This is in reference to the controversy about Nicholas County's athletic program and coaching staff. We have been involved in the basketball program since our freshman years. We feel very strongly against the parents and members of the community who are always criticizing our coaches and their abilities. We have had very rewarding experiences with our team and coaches.

Our coaches have gained our respect and trust by not only teaching us but by being there when we needed them. The coaches can only tell us what to do, they can't play the game. They motivate us and what they tell us, it has to be in us to want to do it. They motivate us and teach us not to be quitters. We are not losers!! We may not have a winning schedule, but we are winners in our own minds.

We have lost games by margins of 50 points, but we have been proud enough and held our heads high and have gone back on the floor and played hard. It's funny, everybody loved to put us down but nobody wanted to come to our games and cheer us on! Our girls team is not in contention for anything but we tried our hardest and for that we thank our coaches.

We want everyone in this community to know that we love our coaches, and are behind them 110 percent all the way.

Sincerely,
Three Nicholas County

Hopes banquet will be repeated

To The Carlisle Mercury:

A junior high basketball banquet was held Thursday, May 16, at the elementary school.

All parents of junior high basketball players and cheerleaders, we want to thank Principal Gerald Hammons and assistant principal Mariam Hudson for caring enough to plan a banquet to recognize these fine young people.

We want to thank the cooks at the elementary school for preparing the ham and biscuits, Mrs. Dorothy Wooley and the teachers for helping set up and serve the food and a special thanks to Coach Rob Barr and Mrs. Judy Hawkins for taking the time to help our children this year.

The banquet was potluck and the school awarded trophies to each ball player and cheerleader.

We parents think the banquet was a terrific idea and we hope it continues from year to year.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Anderson

Ticket the violators

To The Carlisle Mercury:

I'd like to speak out on behalf of all the handicapped people who need to park in the Handicapped Parking zone only to find an able bodied person has taken the place.

I feel the police should give the violators a ticket, as they would for any other violation. The Handicapped Parking zones aren't just for anybody. They are for the handicapped.

Sincerely,
Norma Spaulding
201 Sycamore Hill, Carlisle

Editor's note: We couldn't agree more, Norma! Ticketing violators would be a step in the right direction. Beyond that, how about impounding the vehicle of a repeat offender?

Two selected top scholars at APES meet

Ten Nicholas County High School students were selected to participate in the American Private Enterprise System (APES) seminar held March 14-16 in Paris.

Missy Sparks, Todd Gaunce, Lisa Linville, Greg Smoot, Kevin Ritchie, Janelle Hall, Cynthia Fisher and Amy McFarland were selected as youth scholars, with Adrianna Roe and Missy Brumagen chosen as junior leaders.

A variety of speakers discussed current business and economic topics, followed by a test to see how much the youth scholars had learned. John Burke of Carlisle's Kentucky Utilities office and Rob Hester, administrator at the Nicholas County Hospital, were the two speakers from Nicholas County who volunteered their time to the APES program.

Gaunce and Sparks were the top scholars at the county level and will be eligible to compete at the state APES program which will be held in late June at the University of Kentucky. The Deposit Bank of Carlisle and the First National Bank of Carlisle will sponsor the trip to the state program.
