Public may visit executive mansions in Frankfort

Visitors to the state capital this summer may want to schedule their trip to Frankfort around a visit to the official residences of Governor Martha Layne Collins and Lieutenant Governor Steven Beshear.

The Kentucky Historical Society provides guided tours of the executive mansions to the public two days a week, unless the buildings are being used for an official function. There is no charge for the tours.

The Governor's Mansion, adjacent to the Capitol, is an elegant Federal residence completed in 1914. It was styled after the Petit Trianon, Marie Antionette's villa near the Palace of Versailles in France, and reflects the same interest in classical and European architecture as the Capitol building.

It has served as the official residence of every Kentucky governor since James B. McCreary. Visiting hours are Tuesday and Thursday, 9-11 a.m., weather permitting. Arrangements for a tour can be made by contacting the Capitol Information Desk at 502-564-3449.

The Old Governor's Mansion, located at 420 High Street, now serves as the home of Kentucky's lieutenant governors. Built in the Georgian style and completed in 1798, the house was the residence of 33 Kentucky governors until 1914. After extensive renovation, it has been the official residence of seven of Kentucky's lieutenant governors since 1955. Visitors may visit the Old Governor's Mansion on Tuesday and Thursday from 1:30-3:30 p.m.

UK Sports Report

the coaches—Joe Dean Jr. was the recruiter—wanted him to wait to formally announce his choice.

Why? First, because it could compromise UK's recruiting other prospects. Second, verbal commitments mean nothing because recruiters from other schools ignore them and continue trydig to change a player's mind using whatever tactics necessary. Here is where the recruiting business becomes cutthroat poker and gets dirty.

UK recognized, as in the case with Georgia whisking Henderson, and before him Vegn Fleming, away from Louisville, North Carolina might make an 11th hour run at persuading Hord to change his mind. So, Dean quietly "babysat" his prize until the NCAA signing date.

And, although Carolina and Duke —with the help of local boosters—reportedly made concerted last-minute recruiting efforts to change Hord's mind, Dean managed to hold onto his man.

In the Henderson debacle—as happened with Fleming—somebody seems to have slipped up in the babysitting stage of the process and Georgia recruiters got in and changed the kid's mind—for how much money or other inducements, if any, we won't ever know.

But UK is hopeful that it and it continued to recruit Henderson on the sly. And in fact, it is true that the player surfaced in Louisville during the summer and, to some extent, took part in a Cardinal summer basketball camp.

It is curious (perhaps) that since the Henderson flap got into NCAA investigative hands, Beasley has departed Athens to become head coach at Northeast Louisiana State.

There has been speculation that Beasley's departure was part of a Georgia agreement with the NCAA in its decision on how hard to come down on Bulldog basketball.

What will happen to Louisville in light of Georgia's allegations?

Nothing. Beyond a few harsh words and continued hard feelings between the two roundball programs, business will go on as usual. In fact, a friend of mine said Thursday, "Georgia feels like their one up on Louisville right now."

One up?

"Georgia got Fleming and Henderson away from UL," he said. "And they got Derrick Smith away from Georgia. (Hugh) Durham thought he had Smith locked up until Louisville jumped in late and got him."

In summary the Georgia-Louisville row is not typical in only one respect. Normally such word wars do not go on in public. But they do go on.

And so it goes.

If you have have a question or point of view you would like to share, write to Bob Watkins, 91 S. Glenbrook, Ky. 42748. ■

Summer Writers Workshop at MSU

Morehead State University's 1985 Summer Writers Workshop will offer participants credit in either creative or technical writing, according to Dr. Eugene O. Young, associate professor of English.

UK recognized, as in the case with Georgia whisking Henderson, and before him Vegn Fleming, away from Louisville, North Carolina might make an 11th hour run at persuading Hord to change his mind. So, Dean quietly "babysat" his prize until the NCAA signing date.

And, although Carolina and Duke —with the help of local boosters—reportedly made concerted last-minute recruiting efforts to change Hord's mind, Dean managed to hold onto his man.

In the Henderson debacle—as happened with Fleming—somebody seems to have slipped up in the babysitting stage of the process and Georgia recruiters got in and changed the kid's mind—for how much money or other inducements, if any, we won't ever know.

But UK is hopeful that it and it continued to recruit Henderson on the sly. And in fact, it is true that the player surfaced in Louisville during the summer and, to some extent, took part in a Cardinal summer basketball camp.

It is curious (perhaps) that since the Henderson flap got into NCAA investigative hands, Beasley has departed Athens to become head coach at Northeast Louisiana State.

There has been speculation that Beasley's departure was part of a Georgia agreement with the NCAA in its decision on how hard to come down on Bulling basketball.

What will happen to Louisville in light of Georgia's allegations?

Nothing. Beyond a few harsh words and continued hard feelings between the two roundball programs, business will go on as usual. In fact, a friend of mine said Thursday, "Georgia feels like their one up on Louisville right now."

One up?

"Georgia got Fleming and Henderson away from UL," he said. "And they got Derrick Smith away from Georgia. (Hugh) Durham thought he had Smith locked up until Louisville jumped in late and got him."

In summary the Georgia-Louisville row is not typical in only one respect. Normally such word wars do not go on in public. But they do go on.

And so it goes.
