Fryman indicted by grand jury in Fleming County

Clay Fryman, Myers Road, was indicted Nov. 11 by the grand jury in Fleming County for cultivating marijuana for the purpose of sale.

A jury trial has been set for Jan. 14, 1986 at 10 a.m. at the Fleming County courthouse.

Fryman, accompanied by his lawyer Charles Rolph of Flemingsburg, turned himself in Nov. 12, according to the arresting officer, deputy sheriff Eddie Vice.

Fryman posted bond and was released, pending trial in January.

The grand jury charged "that on or about the 17th day of August, 1985, in Fleming County, Ky., the above named defendant committed the offense of cultivating marijuana for the purpose of sale by planting and cultivating over 25 marijuana plants against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

On August 15, 1984, Kentucky State Police and agents from the state Alcohol Beverage Control department destroyed a field of 7,500 marijuana plants growing on Fryman's farm off Scrub Grass Road in Nicholas County. No arrests were made.

Tennessee men involved in wreck

Two Knoxville, Tennessee men were taken to the Nicholas County Hospital Nov. 12 following a wreck on Moorefield Road.

According to Sheriff Charles Ring, an eastbound 1974 Dodge driven by Kurt Madler, 3700 Regan Avenue, Knoxville, failed to negotiate a curve in front of the W.J. (Bun) Clark home. The car left the road, knocking down a mailbox and post in front of Clark's home, and 30 feet of fence and an iron gate on the farm of Mrs. Margaret Wilson.

The accident happened about 10 p.m. Ring said the driver had no insurance. Madler and a companion, Brett Cress, were taken by ambulance to the hospital where Madler was treated for a cracked collarbone. Cress received no serious injuries and did not require hospitalization.

Green River Lake producing muskies

by Art Lander Jr. •

In the last eight years or so, anglers have come to think of Carol Run Lake as the state's only impoundment that offers a high quality muskie fishery. But that situation might change soon. Green River Lake appears to be on the verge of producing numerous legal-size muskie.

Recent population samples taken by electrofishing show that large numbers of fish just below the 30-inch minimum size limit are present in the lake. Kentucky Department of Fish & Wildlife Resources biologist Benjamin T. Kinman, who coordinates the Predator Fish Evaluation Study, characterized the muskie fishery at Green River Lake as "ready to explode."

In one day last month an electrofishing crew shocked up 96 muskies, 33 of which were captured.

"Of those 33 boated, all were released and 28 were tagged so that we can make some growth comparisons and track their movement in the lake," Kinman explained, adding that "20 of the 28 muskie tagged were between 24 and 31 inches in length, with 13 of the fish close to or just over the legal size length."

In RECENT years the muskie fishery at Green River Lake has been growing steadily, boosted by continued stockings that date back to 1972, although muskies will admit that the six-inch muskie that were placed in the lake between 1977 and 1981 didn't fare too well.

"We originally tried to establish both silver muskie and the hybrid 'tiger' muskie in the lake, but it didn't work. The problem was the fact we stocked were too small. They just didn't survive well. Starting in 1982 the muskie were raised up to 9-12 inches in brooder ponds at the hatchery before stocking, and we've had much better success since then," Kinman said.

In August of this year, 8,312 muskie were stocked in Green River Lake. That's a stocking rate of more than one fish per surface acre of water, the largest stocking class so far. By comparison, consider that in 1982, only 1,500 12-inch muskies were released in the lake. As for growth rates, Kinman said it takes just-over three years for a nine-inch fish to reach minimum legal size.

THE RATIONALE behind stocking the lake has always been to restore the fishery that was destroyed when the river was impounded. Muskies are native to the Green River basin, and biologists developed the lake's fishery to utilize available habitat (mainly standing timber) with a goal of establishing trophy individuals and realizing an annual harvest of one pound of muskie per acre, or 10 percent of the lake's total harvest.

Kinman said that Green River Lake meets all of the criteria for establishing a muskie fishery (1) spawns of muskie occurred in the river drainage, (2) cool water habitat is present, (3) the lake has good headwater tributaries, and finally, adequate cover (standing timber) is available.

As for competition with other species, Kinman said "the lake has a tremendous forage base and we feel that the competition for food will not hurt the bass fishery. The size structure of the bass fishery has remained the same since the muskie stockings have accelerated." He said at the present time that most of the muskies caught are being taken incidentally by bass anglers because there is an overlap in preferred habitat.

'Comet Halley' special on KET next Tuesday

After completing its regular 26-year tour around the solar system, our most celebrated celestial visitor, Halley's comet, will return to the earth's skies late this year.

"Comet Halley" will examine the lure of comets, focusing on this most famous one of all. Filmed in observatories, laboratories and historical sites in Europe, the U.S. (including Alaska and Hawaii) and Japan, the program will be aired on KET Tuesday, Nov. 26 at 9 p.m.

"Comet Halley," which will be aired shortly before Halley's comet will first be visible to the naked eye, traces man's often fearful fascination with the comet from its discovery in China in 240 B.C. to the present.

The program looks at the sweep of comet science beginning with Edmond Halley (1656-1742), who first predicted the comet's return at 76-year intervals. His contributions moved comets from the realm of mythology into real science. The process continues to this time around as Halley's comet is the focus of the largest coordinated astronomical event in history. The International Halley Watch.
