Cost of MSU education below national average

An education at Morehead State University currently costs $1,314 less per year than the national average, according to Charles Myers, MSU's associate director of admissions.

MSU's 1985-86 cost is $4,000, 25 percent less than the average cost of $5,314 at other four-year public institutions. The national average is based on a survey of 1,820 colleges and universities conducted by the College Entrance Examination Board, published in the Aug. 14 issue of "The Chronicle of Higher Education."

"Recent information in the national media concerning rising higher education costs is depressing," Myers said. "We don't want people to write off a college education because they think it has gotten too expensive."

A COMPARISON of costs at MSU and other institutions indicates that MSU's policy of providing affordable quality shows that you can still get your money's worth when it comes to an education," he said.

The national average for tuition and fees is $1,362 for in-state undergraduates attending public institutions while tuition and fees at private institutions cost $5,418, according to the survey. MSU's tuition and fees are $974, Myers said.

The survey reported Bennington College, a private college in Bennington, Vt., is the most expensive institution of higher learning in the nation with a cost of $13,810 for tuition, fees, room and board. (Transportation, books and personal expenses were not included in this portion of the report.) Colorado School of Mines, Golden, Colo., will top public institutions at $6,300.

The following figures are MSU's costs based on full-time, undergraduate student who lives in campus housing and purchases 20 meals per week: Tuition and fees $984; room and board $2,100; books, supplies $250; personal, transportation $676; total $4,000.

Book highlights historic architecture in Bourbon County

Historic Paris-Bourbon County Inc., in conjunction with the Kentucky Heritage Council, State Historic Preservation office, announces the publication of Historic Architecture of Bourbon County, Kentucky.

Co-written by William G. Johnson of the Kentucky Heritage Council and Walter E. Langsam, formerly of the Lexington-Fayette Historic Commission, this 330-page hardbound book contains 413 black and white photographs and architectural/historical discussions of 600 sites in the county. An architectural overview provides an analysis of the built environment of Bourbon County and an introduction to the catalog of individual sites.

In addition, there is a historical overview of each rural precinct as well as Paris and Millersburg.

The publication is the culmination of the historic sites survey of Bourbon County conducted by the Kentucky Heritage Council. As part of federal, state and local efforts to identify all sites worthy of preservation in Kentucky, the historic survey of the county is a comprehensive investigation of the buildings, structures, sites and objects that are part of our cultural heritage.

IN BOURBON County 886 sites were documented, a number that includes not only historically and architecturally exceptional structures, but also a broad range of more moderate buildings representing common trends in the material culture of the area. Buildings defined as National Register and Kentucky Survey quality are pictured and described in the publication.

One of the oldest counties in the Commonwealth, Bourbon County was formed from Fayette County in 1785 by the Virginia Legislature seven years before Kentucky entered the Union. The historic architecture of the county is characterized by a large and impressive group of stylistically important houses, churches, commercial and public buildings. Excellent representations of national styles from Federal architecture to Colonial Revival are found in the county.

There is a particularly rich collection of Federal houses, including some of the finest examples of the style in the Commonwealth. Like other Bluegrass counties, the Greek Revival style flourished in Bourbon County with many handsome examples. Yet, Greek Revival domestic architecture in Bourbon County is quite distinctive from the typical Grecian Mansions found in other Bluegrass counties.

IMPORTANT illustrations of the Gothic Revival style remain in the county, including two attributed to architect/builder John McMurtry of Lexington. Numerous Italianate dwellings were constructed in the county, and several spectacular examples are found in rural environments. Late 19th century architectural styles are well illustrated in the county, and Paris has an impressive group of late Richardsonian and Queen Anne residences.

Paris retains an important and interesting collection of Italianate, Victorian and Richardsonian Romanesque commercial architecture including some of the best examples in central Kentucky. Likewise, Millersburg has an impressive commercial district of Italianate and late 19th century buildings.

Copies of the publication can be ordered by remitting a check for $30 to Historic Paris-Bourbon County Inc., Post Office Box 445, Millersburg, Ky. 40348.

Get your car ready for winter soon

It may be warm now, but in the not too distant future cold weather will be howling into Kentucky and rendering all but the best maintained of cars helpless. In preparation, the Blue Grass Auto Club announced its endorsement of October as National Car Care Month.

All motorists can participate in National Car Care Month by having their cars properly maintained and urging others to do the same.

Some quick and simple ways to make sure your car is always in its best operating condition:

* Check the drive belts, hoses and wipers to make sure they're not cracked, frayed, split or torn.
* Check the battery cables to see [illegible] from corrosion.
* Check [illegible] for filter at least every two months and replace if dirty.
* Change oil filter each time the engine oil is changed.
* Inspect all fluid levels including oil, transmission, power steering, antifreeze and brake fluid.
* Check tire pressures monthly, including the spare.
