Burley growers hopeful

by Bennett Roach

These days the elements of suspense and uncertainty in tobacco — from field to factory — are even more common than usual. But one or two upbeat notes crept into the reports and speeches at last month's convention of the Burley and Dark Leaf Tobacco Export Association in Lexington.

One was the surprising word that U.S. burley exports the first nine months of the year are up 37 percent, reaching 132 million pounds. Also, domestic use of burley is up slightly, according toythe USDA.

Another was the reminder that tobacco is one of the few commodities still contributing to the plus side of the U.S. balance of trade — a $2 billion contribution this year, a rare occurrence in these times of trade deficits.

FOREIGN MARKETS normally take one-fourth to one-fifth of American burley, but the recent rise is expected to last, due to the great and growing oversupply. Despite this year's smaller crop, the old stocks are swollen by a sharply higher carryover, and with prospects of more of the same for 1985-86. World supply now stands at about 3.7 billion pounds, or the equivalent of 2.6 years use.

While pending legislation at Washington holds top interest, world trade remains a major concern for burley, and the export outlook was given emphasis in the convention talks.

Ben F. Reeves, vice president and managing director of the Burley and Dark Leaf Tobacco Export Association, reported on four foreign market development tripa he made to Europe and Asia during the past year. He spoke of present foreign trade conditions as part of the "cycle of economic distress," largely due to the over-priced dollar in relation to foreign currencies.

BUT HE WARNED that "the world is not our exclusive oyster any more," and that the U.S. producer must continue to offer quality tobacco in competition with countries that are fast catching up with American burley.

Spokesmen for the export trade were hopeful of regaining some of their lost ground in light of the U.S. dollar declines in value in world trade, and if the quality of U.S. burley isn't allowed to slip.

Citing the International Trade Commission's decision early this year that imports are not adversely affecting the domestic industry, Reeves said "the inquiry was ended but not the controversy."

Guaranteed farm loans expedited by FmHA

Vance L. Clark, administrator of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Farmers Home Administration, has announced that FmHA is adopting major changes in its guaranteed loan programs. The changes are designed to help farmers with severe credit problems arrange their financing for the coming year in a timely fashion.

"We are going to streamline our guaranteed loan procedure," said Clark. "We are going to expedite the entire processing operation, so that farmers will be spared much of the paperwork, delay and frustration they've had to deal with in the past."

The changes in the guaranteed loan procedures took effect October 7, after publication as an interim rule in the Federal Register the week of Sept. 30. They include:

* Allowing a customer to establish a "line of credit" with a participating lender, so approved funds may be advanced as needed for loan purposes.

* Accepting the approved lenders' completed forms as much as possible, to avoid duplication of paperwork, and to save time and effort.

* Setting time limits for completing the loan guarantee application process.

* Allowing farmers to use guaranteed loans to refinance certain FmHA loans.

* Giving lenders quicker settlement on their loss claims.

* Modifying requirements for approved lender status.

"Our first priority is to help our farmers," said Clark. "We can do that by offering them an efficient, workable guaranteed loan program. To do that, we must begin immediately to work with our field staff, and the commercial and cooperative lenders participating in the program.
