Car safety seat not used correctly

A child's car safety seat usually costs less than one visit to a hospital emergency room, actually making it relatively inexpensive. The number of parents buying seats is increasing daily. Yet 70 percent of seats purchased are not used correctly.

Time to secure the child correctly is no more than to wash a baby's face or to have the infant's agency of a parent following a child's injury or death that might have been prevented with a simple act of using a car seat correctly. Improper use of safety seats can be nearly as injurious as not using them at all.

SOME OF THE common mistakes are:

(1) Using the car seat without a harness or with the car's seatbelt. These belts are not long enough to fasten around the car seat. Ask for the car seat in the family car before buying.

(2) Wrapping baby popliteal surface by harnessing in the car seat. Correctly, legs must be free of harness to allow for movement.

(3) Placing baby in a forward position. Until the car seat is up to weight or 17 pounds, the backward position must be used.

(4) Using the safety seat without its attached harness could result in baby being thrown from the seat.

(5) Fastening the harness or belt loosely will allow baby to suffer a severe fall in collision.

(6) Allowing adults or children to ride loose if they protest or climb out.

(7) Continuing to use a car seat that has been a crash, rattle and otherwise weakened, will no longer be stable enough to offer total protection.
