More students staying in school

Statistics compiled by the Kentucky Department of Education show the holding power for the class of 1985 up by one percentage point over the previous year, reflecting an increase of 67.3 percent in total graduates from the ninth-grade class of four years earlier, she said.

This figure means that more students are staying in our schools and more are graduating, McDonald said. "It speaks well for the quality of Kentucky's schools and the relative stability of our economy."
