GENERAL NEWS

Program begun to keep drunks off roads

A major new program to help keep drunken drivers off the road and help businesses that serve alcohol do so responsibly was launched in Louisville Thanksgiving week.

It will be available statewide within a month.

The training program for those who serve and sell alcohol is called Concerned Alcohol Servers Education, or CASE.

Leaders in the restaurant, hotel/motel, tourism and alcoholic beverage sales industry requested the program, and the Kentucky Department of Education's Office of Vocational Education developed the half-day seminars for businesses throughout the state.

"We at the Department of Education were eager to join with the hospitality industry in a program that promotes the responsible use of alcohol," State Superintendent of Public Instruction Alice McDonald said.

"The hospitality industry is very important economically to Kentucky, and we all want to stop the tragic toll of lives lost and shattered by drunken drivers."

The CASE program for servers and sellers of alcohol will be ongoing, with training sessions starting in Louisville, Lexington, Paducah, Owensboro, Bowling Green and Northern Kentucky by mid-December, before the major holidays.

Representatives of the Kentucky Restaurant Association, the Kentucky and the Greater Louisville hotel-motel associations, the Alcoholic Beverage Sales Association and the Kentucky Tourism Federation met at the Galt House in Louisville Monday, November 24 to finalize the course materials with Department of Education vocational staffers.

"These groups asked for the training to help their employees become responsible hospitality professionals, and to deal with the increasing third-party liability problem their industry faces," said Bill Asher, Office of Vocational Education specialist who is coordinating CASE with Jo Carole Dickson of Jefferson State Vocational School.

Using videotapes, role-playing and class exercises with small groups, instructors will help bartenders, servers and clerks selling package liquor recognize various stages of intoxication, learn techniques to slow a patron's drinking in an effective but courteous manner, and know how to help the patron sober up before leaving or get home without driving a vehicle.

Joan Kemper, executive director of the Kentucky Restaurant Association, noted that it is important for managers to have the same kind of awareness training.

Managers are welcome at CASE seminars, Asher said, and a private firm based in Louisville is offering workshops for owners/managers that cover the legal liability and documentation techniques in more depth.

Les Nichols of the Kentucky Hotel/Motel Association said the affordability ($1 per person for materials) and the ongoing nature of the CASE seminars are especially important as the businesses have fairly high turnover.

A number of businesses have already asked for training on-site, Asher said, and seminars for any other alcohol-serving and selling firms will be available at state vocational schools. The preferred class size is 10 or more, but under 30 persons.

Kentucky's CASE is believed to be the first alcohol server training program offered by a state education department in cooperation with the businesses affected.

Oklahoma has a program ready for implementation soon, and there are a limited number of private firms offering training. CASE training is free, with a $1.00 per person materials fee.

"Our program makes the training affordable for the smallest bar or convenience store," said State Superintendent McDonald.

"It is the small businesses that need our help most if they are to thrive and contribute to the state's economy."

There are about 19,000 liquor licenses issued to Kentucky businesses, Asher said, and the Office of Vocational Education is trying to reach all such businesses through their trade associations, the media, and direct mailings.

Interested owners or managers of businesses handling liquor may contact Bill Asher at the Kentucky Department of Education, Office of Vocational Education, 2133 Capital Plaza Tower, Frankfort, KY 40601. The phone number is (502) 564-3472.

CPAs want tax simplified

Now that the Tax Reform Act of 1986 appears ready for the President's signature, a number of significant changes are needed to simplify Kentucky tax law, according to the Kentucky Society of Certified Public Accountants.

The group recommends a special session of the General Assembly in January 1987 to deal with the tax reform issue. In a letter to Gov. Collins, KSCPA President Roderick J. Tompkins said, "The need for meaningful state tax reform is by itself sufficient justification for a special session of the General Assembly. However, if this is not possible, we urge that you consider including state tax reform on the agenda should you have any other reason to call a special session."

Without a special session, the earliest date changes could be made would be during the regular session of the General Assembly in 1988. CPAs say this wait is too long, that the current differences existing between the Kentucky statute and the new Federal law, which will go into effect for the taxable year 1987, are too great.

"Kentucky taxpayers will be required to keep two complete sets of records - one set to be used preparing the Federal return and another for the state return," said Tompkins, a Madisonville CPA. "If we are able to adopt the Federal code during a special session in early 1987, then the Kentucky return will be vastly simplified, saving taxpayers the burden of filing returns under two sets of rules."

SIMPLIFICATION of the Kentucky return would eliminate filing differences in these areas:

* Over 6 million Federal taxpayers are expected to be cut from the tax rolls because their income level falls below the amount required under the new law. But, for those taxpayers living in Kentucky, filing a state return would still be required.
* The new Federal law replaces the zero bracket amount with a standard deduction, which a taxpayer can use instead of itemizing deductions. In Kentucky, because of the current system of standard deductions and personal exemptions, taxpayers will be forced to itemize on their state return or pay more in state income taxes.
* In the new Federal law, passive losses from tax shelters and losses from rental activities can offset only income from those activities -- with some exceptions for rental losses up to $25,000 and working interests in oil and gas. Without reform, Kentucky taxpayers will still be able to use these losses to offset other income.
* The new Federal law repeals the net capital gain exclusion for individuals and provides that capital gains of individuals, estates and trusts will be 100 percent subject to tax, but at a rate not to exceed 28 percent. Kentucky taxpayers, filing under the old system, will still use a 60 percent exclusion on capital gains, which will then be taxed at Kentucky rates.

The current rules for depreciation in Kentucky, which were enacted during the special session in July of 1985, are substantially different from Federal and could also be simplified during a special session. Kentucky's rules, which follow the pre-1981 Federal guidelines, are antiquated and need to be changed, according to CPAs.

CPAs stress that a new Kentucky tax law should be strictly revenue neutral, neither increasing or decreasing the overall amount of tax revenue to be collected by the state as a result of the new Federal law.

VA loan rate drops

For the seventh time in 18 months, the Veterans Administration has lowered its maximum home loan interest rate.

Effective November 24, VA-guaranteed fixed rate mortgages dropped to 9 percent--the lowest since June 28, 1978.

The decrease continues a pattern that began in September 1981 when VA rates peaked at an all-time of 17% percent. The last change, from 10½ percent to 9½ percent, occurred March 3, 1986.

The cut brings the VA rate closer to the market rate nationally.

Besides benefiting new veteran-buyers, VA officials said the cut in the rate can help many veterans who already have home loans with high interest rates.

By refinancing, veterans may be able to cut monthly payments by $200 a month or more and save thousands of dollars over the life of the loan.

The VA will also decrease by one-half percent the maximum rates for Graduated Payment Mortgages (GPMs) to 9¼ percent and home improvement loans to 10½ percent.

The rates for manufactured home loans will also be decreased to 11½ percent for unit-only loans and 11 percent for loans to purchase either a unit with a lot or a lot for a unit already purchased.

VA home loans may be used to purchase, construct, alter, improve, repair, or refinance a home. This includes the purchase of condominiums and manufactured homes, with or without a lot.

EKU misses tourney bid

Although it did not receive one of the coveted at-large bids to the 1986 NCAA championship playoffs, Eastern Kentucky University's volleyball team had another excellent season which ended last weekend with a 27-13 overall record, a sixth consecutive Ohio Valley Conference title, an eighth-place ranking in the south region final poll, and inclusion in the top 32 teams in the nation.

The slim hope that coach Geri Polivino's team had for one of the two at-large bids from the south region faded from reality Friday night when Southeastern Conference champion LSU defeated the Colonels in the opening round of the EKU Thanksgiving Classic. After dropping the first two games 13-4 and 15-7, EKU bounced back to take game three 15-7, but lost the match in game four losing 13-4.

The Colonels bounced back on Saturday to whip Louisville in three straight by the scores of 15-3, 12-11, and 15-0. In the final match of the Classic on Saturday evening, EKU lost to Houston in three by the counts of 15-9, 16-14, and 15-7.

Senior All-American candidate Angela Boykins closed out her EKU career in fine style and was named to the All-Classic team for her weekend performance.

She was the only Colonel to be selected to the honor team which was dominated by LSU with three selections in MVP Wendy Stahmer, Stacey Samuels and Deirdra Brown. Houston's Peg Reardon and Sherry Berger rounded out the team.

For Polivino it was a disappointing end to an otherwise good season. From the outset Eastern's players and coaches knew it would take a tremendous record against a tough non-conference slate of opponents to receive an NCAA bid.

We had so much pressure on us this year. We purposely lined up a strong schedule knowing it would be a make or break situation for the team, but we knew without an automatic bid we needed to defeat some of the region's best teams," she said.

Despite not receiving a bid, Eastern did earn respect from the pollsters. The Colonels' eighth place ranking means they are among the top 32 teams in the final NCAA poll of the four national regions.

To Fleming County

Lady Jackets drop season's opener

A scrappy Nicholas County Lady Jacket Basketball team that gave away too many points in the first and third quarters fell 49-31 to powerhouse Fleming County Monday evening.

Led in offense by Tonya Moore and Sandy Warner with six points each, the local girls could not overcome deficits of 18 points in the first quarter and 19 points in the third quarter.

Second and fourth quarter play was more evenly matched as the deficits were only four and five points respectively.

The Lady Jackets were led defensively by juniors Christel Bussell and Sandra Warner whose persistent efforts were belied by the score.

We are a young team with only one senior. This will be a growing and learning year for us and I look forward to much improvement this season," said NCHS Coach Barbara Kenney.
