Do You Work With A Computer?

More and more people are using computers. Those who spend several hours a day in front of a computer should have their eyes examined at least once a year. This recommendation has been made not only by optometrists, but by NIOSH (National Institute of Occupational Safety & Health), a branch of the U.S. Department of Health.

The working distance of a computer's video display screen typically is different from that of a typewriter. If you use traditional reading glasses, they were probably prescribed to correct vision problems at a near distance of 16 inches. The computer screen is usually viewed from a greater distance.

Special prescriptions are often required for computer users who require reading glasses or bifocals. An bifocal set higher than usual can help the user avoid tilting his head back when looking through the near section of the bifocal, thus alleviating strain. Trifocals or progressive lenses have also proved effective.

Tax law may hit hard

The 1986 Tax Reform Act, heralded by some as an improvement over past tax laws, may prove to be just the opposite for farmers, at least in the short run.

Some groups will pay less in taxes, others will pay more. Farmers are going to be in the will pay more category.

Some old law provisions helping farmers in the past, but not included in the new law, include: income averaging, capital gains provisions, and investment tax credits.

And, too, other tax management tools have become more restrictive in their application.

According to Dick Trimble, economist with the University of Kentucky, the new law will result in some farmers being favored of the farm, while those who survive should be better off than in the past.

Beautiful: Tips from the Hart

By Betty Hart
If you were to ask a dozen people what they think makes a woman beautiful, you would get a list of specific features. A big smile, a firm figure, long, shiny hair, a perfect glowing skin, and so on. All of these are certainly beautiful and any one of us would be happy to have them. Yet, I believe that beauty is something more than that. My mother often said to me, when I was a young girl "Beauty is only skin deep." It may sound like a fluffy moral judgment, but from my years of experience in the modeling business, a woman observed with beauty, I can tell you that beauty is more than a list of features.

Think a minute of the woman you know and see often, one or two will probably come to mind as being especially beautiful. But if you think about it, they are probably more attractive than beautiful. If you examine these "beautiful" women you will see that something more than hair, eyes, skin and figure made them appear to stand out from the crowd.

Head beauty is not just looking up to date. There are examples of beauty that have nothing to do with what you see in most books and magazines. I said before, a collection of perfect features does not make for beauty. Put, together, perfect features, perfectly assembled, you could get the cold-projection of a Greek statue, not a warm, desirable beautiful woman.

So, is not perfection, what? Discovery: Beautiful women believe they are beautiful. An insightful man once told me "Tell a woman she is beautiful, and immediately she becomes more beautiful." Someone else has discovered that they are beautiful, and they radiate the pleasure of their discovery, even though their features or their figure or their makeup are not perfect. I am convinced that nothing makes a woman more beautiful than the belief that she is so.

Don't take your beauty so seriously. The pursuit of beauty is one of the great joys of being a woman. It should give you pleasure and should be fun. When you're on that, an environment of a beautiful fur coat, or all the fur coats in the store, (that's really fun) see yourself in a new light. Knowing yourself a little better gives you confidence and even power. Working toward beauty should bring both joy and fulfillment.

GOOD BLESS, I WISH FOR YOU LOVE, JOY, AND PEACE. HAPPY Holidays!
