Record corn production for state

The 1985 crop year in Kentucky was characterized by generally favorable weather conditions, record high corn for grain production, a record high soybean yield for the state, but prices below the previous year.

Spring fieldwork began earlier than normal and advanced quickly. Most areas of the state received adequate rainfall during critical stages of crop development. Corn harvest began earlier than normal but slow crop dry-down hampered harvest progress late in the year.

Corn for grain production totaled a record high 138.1 million bushels, nine percent more than the 1984 crop and four percent above the previous record set in 1982. Acreage harvested for grain, at 1.36 million acres, as the largest since 1959. Yield per acre averaged 102 bushels, only one bushel below the 1982 record of 103 bushels per acre.

White corn production at 7.4 million bushels fell 30 percent from the previous year. Acreage harvested for grain dropped 30 percent from 1984 while yield per acre was unchanged at 90 bushels.

Production of burley tobacco totaled 422.8 million pounds, down 14 percent from last year. Yield per acre averaged 2,400 pounds compared to 2,340 pounds in 1984. Harvested acreage dropped 18 percent to 172,000 acres.

Soybean production fell one percent to 41.8 million bushels for 1985. A 16 percent drop in acreage harvested was nearly offset by a record high average yield of 34 bushels per acre. The previous yield record had been 32.5 bushels in 1979.

The first session will discuss "Maybe the U.S. Government" and the second session will discuss "Maybe the lobbies, the media, political action committees, public opinion polls or even other countries?"

Kentucky Afield

Drive a little to catch a lot

by Art Lauder Jr.

Even though there's snow on the ground now, it won't be long until it's time to go bass fishing this spring.

March is one of the best months for catching big bass, a time when many a seven or eight-pound lunker succumbs to a fluttering jig-and-pork rind combination, or to a spinnerbait bounced slowly just off the bottom.

The early spring "wake-up" period, when the days are getting longer and water temperatures are slowly rising, always produces the biggest fish of the year — big females ripe with eggs who are gorging themselves in a pre-spawn feeding frenzy.

While the larger impoundments like Barkley, Kentucky, Barren, Herrington and Taylorsville seem to get most of the attention by serious bass anglers, there's a small state-owned lake in west central Kentucky that's one of Kentucky's top bass producers, an impoundment that has yielded more than a few 10-pounders in the past few years.

IT'S LAKE MALONE, the 692-acre lake built in 1961, which does indeed rank right up there with those major impoundments mentioned above when it comes to bass productivity. Recently, in fact, Lake Malone was overpopulated with small bass. This condition led to the establishment of a "no size limit" on the lake for the past three years.

But last December at its quarterly meeting, the Kentucky Fish and Wildlife Commission voted to adopt a 12"-2 size limit at Lake Malone in an effort to maintain the quality bass fishery which now exists in this 16-mile-long, wishbone-shaped impoundment. Lake Malone is located in Todd, Logan and Muhlenberg counties, approximately 15 miles south of Greenville.

It's believed that the "no size limit" management strategy worked because recent samples have shown that the bass population is back in balance. Lake Malone is managed by David Bell, the Northwestern Fishery District biologist for the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources.

EFFECTIVE March 1, 1986, the size limit on bass at Lake Malone will be 12 inches, although anglers may keep two bass under the minimum length from their daily creel of 10. This will prevent a further buildup of undersize bass in the impoundment where it's been proven that bass have good recruitment and fast growth rates.

A fertilization program which is now under way should also help the bluegill population in the rocky, scenic lake which has a mean depth of 20.8 feet and lots of cover — submerged timber, shoreline boulders, deep points and submerged ledges.
