UK to be involved in interactive video test

The Cooperative Extension Service of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture, Lexington, has selected as one of 17 test sites for a new educational method. The new method, interactive video, links a videodisk player to a television screen through a computer. The computer can take directly from any place on the disk to any other place on the disk. It's like a book. With video tape a user must go forward or backward to any other page.

An interactive instructional system allows the user to add the computer to further explain items that are not clear, or to skip over items that are already known. It permits the user to proceed at his own pace, and in whatever order seems appropriate.

For the test the equipment will be set up in an Extension office in a county yet to be chosen, Barnhart said.

Tough choice — raise taxes or reduce services

State and local taxes are likely to jump by 20 to 30 percent within the next five years.

Paul Pease, community development specialist in the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture, in Lexington, said the tax rates will be required to meet the increased spending that state and local governments will have to undertake in the coming years.

"The country is wearing out. Roads, bridges, water, power and sewer systems are getting old," Pease said. Since the end of World War II the bulk of the budgets of state and local governments have gone for new construction. What has been built in the past 30 years is going to have to be replaced, Pease said.

A survey by Touche Ross & Co. of 961 state and local government officials throughout the U.S. showed that as out of 10 of them expect to see spending on public facilities—roads, bridges, sanitation, public transportation, and the like—to at least double within the next five years. Of those, 40 percent expect to see the figure triple.

Susanne Kilber, senior administrative aide in the Lexington-Payette Department of Public Works, said about 20 percent of the total urban county government budget is spent on public facilities. That comes to $20.3 million. If that amount were to double, taxes would have to rise by 21 percent. If it were to triple, the rise would come to 46 percent.

Ms. Kilber said that the continued

Over 500 respond to KET job special

"How To Find a Job," a seven-hour collaborative effort by the Department for Employment Services and KET, received more than 500 phone calls statewide on Jan. 11. More than 100 employees from KET, the Department for Employment Services, Unemployment Insurance and Education were involved in the job special. Louisville radio's Milton Metz was host.

According to Jean Beckett, marketing specialist for the Job Training Partnership Act, and Linda Montgomery, branch manager/Support Services Branch, the job special received a phone call from every county in the Commonwealth, with the majority of calls being placed from Jefferson County (Louisville). Currently their departments are responding to the 300 inquiries with follow-up information and are passing comments from callers to appropriate personnel within departments involved in the ambitious special, which was signed for the hearing impaired by Karen Cross, Kent Mann and Norma Lewis.

Governor Martha Layne Collins and James Daniels, commissioner of Employment Services, were among several who pre-recorded comments which appeared in the program. Gov. Collins commented on three sections: Dislocated Workers, Department for Employment Services, and Education. These segments, in addition to Self-Evaluation, On-the-Job Training, Applications and Interviews, and Inquiries will be made available to the public.

According to Sally Jackson, producer of the job special, "This program exceeded our wildest expectations and we are delighted and gratified to have been a part of the process and to see the unemployment of Kentucky.

THE SHORTEST DISTANCE BETWEEN TWO POINTS

If you're in business, the newspaper is the medium for your message. It's the shortest distance between two points... you and the customer.

As a business person you can appreciate the direct line of communication you have to the consumer with newspaper advertising. It's the foremost local publicity force in Kentucky. That's the collective opinion of adult Kentuckians.

The customers say the newspaper is the most believable and influential source of advertising when compared to radio and television.

It is also the single most preferred source of advertising as revealed by Kentuckians. Newspaper advertising... It's the shortest distance between two points... you and the customers.
