Eye Openers
By
Dr. Robert F. Pretzsch
Strabismus

If a child has an eye that turns in (esotropia), is surgery the only cure?

Surgery should be considered—but glasses should be tried first. In many cases, excessive farsightedness in children induces the esotropia in the first place. Wearing especially prescribed glasses may straighten the eyes and there is no necessity to augment the cosmetic correction with visual training that re-teaches the patient to use the eye that has been neglected. The younger the patient the shorter the period of treatment generally required.

Wearing glasses to straighten an eye initially does not mean that the patient will need glasses forever.

Non-surgical treatment of not only esotropias, but exotropias (eyes that turn out) and hypertropias (eyes that turn up) is now covered by many medical insurance policies. Consult your own carrier to see if this professional service is covered by your policy.

Surgery should only be considered if glasses and visual training prove unsuccessful. Even after surgery, glasses and training are generally necessary.

Fireworks injure 117 Kentuckians

Fireworks were associated with an estimated 117 injuries in Kentucky during 1985, according to the Department for Health Services records. All of those injuries occurred to people under 25 years of age.

These numbers reflect an increase from 1984 when there were 75 injuries associated with fireworks in the state.

"Every year people are warned about the danger of fireworks, and every year people are injured by fireworks," said E. P. Conyers of the department's Product Safety branch. "Using fireworks at the Fourth of July is an American tradition. We're not advocating that people abandon that tradition, but we are asking them to be careful.

"Most injuries associated with fireworks in Kentucky occur because someone is using an illegal explosive or is misusing a legal product," said Conyers.

Kentucky allows certain Class C fireworks, such as snakes, sparklers, fountains, ground spinners, snappers, smoke devices and booby traps. Fireworks not referred under Kentucky law include bottle rockets, missiles to the rockets, Roman candles, firecrackers or any fireworks that have a loud explosion or shoot into the air.

Kentucky Afield

Dove season may open September 1

by John Wilson

It is highly likely, although not certain as yet, that Kentucky's dove season will open on Sept. 1 again this year.

The actual setting of dove season dates must be made after federal frameworks are released, which usually takes place in late July. As migratory game birds, doves fall under federal control and states must set their seasons within the guidelines of the federal framework.

However, there have been no indications to date of any major federal changes. And, as Division of Wildlife Director Bill Graves told the Fish and Wildlife Commission at the June 13 meeting, this has been the first year in recent memory that the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources has not received a single letter complaining about dove season.

So if the federal framework permits, Kentucky's dove hunters should be able to take to the field Sept. 1, the traditional opening day of a sport steeped in tradition.

AND IF the framework follows that of recent years, the season will run through Oct. 31, with shooting hours from 11:00 a.m. until sunset. There will also be a short (around nine days) season in late November and/or early December to take advantage of late-migrating doves. Because of the shortness of days and cooler weather, hunting should be permitted from sunrise until sunset during this later phase of the split season.

The only expected change in dove regulations concerns hunting on certain wildlife management areas in the Western Waterfowl Zone. On the Ballard, Swan Lake, Peal, Sloughs and Kaler Bottoms areas, dove hunters must use non-toxic steel shot. Dove hunters are responsible for much of the lead shot deposited on these areas, lead which creates a hazard for waterfowl later in the season.

BAG LIMITS and other dove hunting regulations are expected to remain essentially unchanged.

At the same time the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service releases the federal framework for dove hunting, we'll get the final word on the structure of our September duck season. Since its inception a few years ago, this short season (designed to let Kentucky hunters take advantage of native wood ducks before they migrate out of the state) has grown in popularity.

Indications are that this season will also be very similar to last year's with one major exception — the hunter survey will no longer be required.

IN THE PAST, hunters participating in this early duck season had to obtain, fill out and return these cards, providing a complete list of all ducks taken. The Division of Wildlife is planning to conduct a major state-wide survey of waterfowl hunters this year, making these cards unnecessary.

State and federal waterfowl stamps, as well as a valid hunting license, will be required during this early duck season.
