Roger, Kay and friends

Any conversation with Roger Sampson sooner or later gets around to his favorite topic, Blue Licks. Roger, now 80, stopped by for a chat last week and, before he left made a couple of points: 1, the burial grounds for white men killed at the Battle of Blue Licks are not where they are said to be, and 2, check with him before taking off for Europe.

As to the burial grounds, Roger says they are really located on his cousin Bill Hunter's farm in Robertson County, very near the state park. He also posed another interesting question that has bothered him through the years: Where are the Indians buried? He thinks he knows.

As to Europe, Roger made a trip around the world four years ago and found the food in Jerusalem terrible ("they put cinnamon in mashed potatoes") didn't care for Paris or New York, but loved Athens, Greece — "Rome and Germany were all right, too," he added.

Roger said he grew up with most people in Nicholas County but the only problem is at his age "I grew up and passed them." He recalls the days when a visit to Dr. Campbell's office cost $1. "Now days, everyone is wanting more money."

In his lifetime, Roger has been associated with some interesting and valuable antiques. He says most are safely placed in the homes of relatives. He especially mentioned niece Geraldine Standiford Garrell of Lexington whom I haven't seen since her school days here, and of course, his sister and Geraldine's mother, Mrs. Thelma Standiford, a frequent and welcome contributor of historical data through the years. Good people.

Mum is still the word

Mum is still the word in Frankfort, evidentally, as far as Jockey International is concerned. We made a call Friday to Gov. Collins' press secretary Barbara Hadley Smith to check on the progress of the entertainment the state made Oct. 9 to work closely with Jockey in solving its water problems at the knitting plant.

Smith referred the call to the Department of Natural Resources, with the statement that someone there would check on any progress and call me back. That was Friday. As of Tuesday at presstime Frankfort hadn't called. Probably still celebrating the Oct. 29 announcement of Union Underwear Company's $20 million expansion project at four Union plants in Kentucky. The state helped out to the tune of $1.9 million for sewage treatment, it was reported.

If we could get just a third of that amount for water treatment facilities here in Carlisle things would be super. Granted, Jockey's operation in Kentucky is not as large as Union's but the governor did say she was optimistic something could be worked out concerning the local plant. And I believe she is a woman of her word. Eventually, perhaps.

Church women stewing

For somewhere in the neighborhood of 25 years, the women of the First Christian Church have held their oyster stew supper on a Wednesday. But, since the church basement on Catherine Street is now the site of the Tender Loving Care day school center, Monday through Friday, the supper had to be changed to another time, lest animal crackers replace saltines, or some such thing.

So, for the very first time the informal supper has been shifted to Sunday, so as not to interfere with day care activities, which the church happily houses. It's coming up Sunday from 5-7:30 p.m. and promises to have all the amenities of past years, including relish tray, oyster stew, chili, vegetable soup, pimento cheese sandwiches, and good, fattening homemade desserts.

Carryout orders will also be filled and walkers and joggers are invited to stop by and take home supper. Seems to me a souper idea to shift to Sunday, or whenever. That food is so tasty I could eat it seven nights a week. Well, six for sure.

A good mistake

As you know, Lieutenant's Lark finished out of the money (he ran ninth) in the mile division of Saturday's breeder's Cup card at Santa Anita. Do not weep for all the owners, however, our Kay Shumate did quite well, as (racing) luck would have it.

Since Lieutenant's Lark had drawn post position No. 5 Kay thought that was his number to bet on. So, early on that morning she goes and plunks down $50 across the board on No. 5 only to find out that No. 5 was a longshot by the name of Last Tycoon. (Lieutenant's Lark was No. 12, coupled in the mutual field with Fred Astaire.) She almost felt like tearing up the ticket.

It turned out to be the best "mistake" Kay has made in a long time. Last Tycoon was first across the finish line in a stunning upset and Kay collected a tidy sum for her cookie jar.

A member of the Shumate party was Rick Norton, former UK quarterback who admitted to Kay after the race that he thought he'd switch to her way of wagering since he'd been a loser for years betting the conventional way.

Recent focus on antique Dresden china plates circulated by Ratliff Bros. years ago caused Mrs. Virgil Gudgel to go looking through her possessions, which her mother, Mrs. Homer Hillock had collected through the years.

Martine didn't find any with Carlisle scenes but did come across a salad plate of the White House and a dinner plate picturing Niagara Falls, both valuable antiques.

Looking for a millionaire? According to the State and Metropolitan Area Date Book, 1986, your chances would be best in North Dakota where they number 566 per 1,000,000 population. In Kentucky, you have to look more diligently. It seems we have only 96 per 100,000 and rank 27th among states.

Westward ho, the wagons...

and those wide open spaces to let your horses loose

"I spent a few pleasant hours the other day at the Homer T. Pettibone Freeway Camp near Snodgrass, Nev.," Arthur Hoppe wrote the other day in his column. He went on to say that it isn't much, just a dozen tents, a mess hall and a parking lot off a straight, empty, 15-mile stretch of U. S. Interstate 50. But it's saved the psyches and perhaps the very souls of many an Easterner.

He went on to say the camp has been in the news lately due to the hotly contested bill in Congress to raise the speed limit on such stretches of highway to 65 miles an hour. The bill is vigorously supported by virtually every senator and representative west of the Mississippi as a blow for freedom. It is adamantly opposed by most Easterners for reasons best known to Dr. Pettibone.

"Easterners are descendants of people who stayed at home while their more vigorous neighbors chanced the rutted, hazardous roads heading west," he said. "They now stay at home because they can't get anywhere and, if they did, there's no place to park.

"Consequently, they are stricken with acute freeway envy. Any layman who has been to New York or Boston can see the invidious symptoms—uncouth, unruly, infantile behavior characterized by post-perinal screaming, foot-stamping and endemic surliness in both public and private life."

As he spoke, a hapless man drove up in a Chevrolet Camaro, tumbled out and kissed the ground. "Good work, Mr. Nivis," said Dr. Pettibone, lifting him to his feet and patting his shoulder. "You can be up to 45 out there today. Tomorrow, we'll try for 50, won't we?"

As Nivis tottered into the mess hall for a stiff drink, Pettibone smiled proudly. "Just think, he's only been here a week," he said. "He'll be whole again in no time. Oh, oh, Mrs. Nussbaum's been hit by agoraphobia again."

A Ford Taurus weaved into the lot and came to rest against a pole. A middle-aged woman staggered out crying, "No cars, no stop signs, no red lights—arrggghhh!"

A white-coated attendant rushed up to lead her off. "Take her to the video room," called Dr. Pettibone. "Give her a fix of Tokyo rush hour traffic scenes and maybe that car chase from 'The French Connection.' She'll be all right in a day or two."

He turned to me. "We do have an occasional problem camper," he said. "Our fondest success (a world record, an Olympic gold medal), would you take nothing but jackrabbits; he missed pedestrians."

"Pedestrians?"

"He said he never missed them in New York."

I shook my head. "It's a shame," I said, "That Easterners and Westerners can't unite on this bill before Congress that will so directly affect the lives of all of us."

"I'm surprised they don't," said Dr. Pettibone. "They have so much in common."

"They do?"

"Yes," he said, "no Westerner has ever gone 55 on a freeway either."

Casey Stengel enlivened baseball with his off-the-wall one-liners and run amok mannerisms.

Stengel and his language play a large role in a new MacMillan book, "I'd Rather Be A Yankee" by John Tullius, which he subtitles "An Oral History of America's Most Loved and Most Hated Baseball Team."

A few Stengelisms: "It ain't sex that's troublesome to ball players, it's staying up all night looking for it. You gotta learn that if you don't get it by midnight, chances are you ain't gonna get it and if you do, it ain't worth it."

"Now there's three things you can do in a baseball game: you can win or you can lose or it can rain."

"There comes a time in every man's life, and I've had plenty of them."

Another Yankee, catcher Yogi Berra, also did strange things to the mother tongue. In the book, Tullius gives Berra his innings, too.

Some Berrisms: "A nickel ain't hardly worth a dime anymore."

"I usually take a two-hour nap from one o'clock to four."

When asked what his cup size was, Berra replied, "How should I know? I ain't in shape yet."

The question was put to 100 world-class athletes and it went something like this: If you were guaranteed your fondest success (a world record, an Olympic gold medal), would you take this drug even though it meant you would be dead in five years."

Over half said yes, and another group said they'd have to think about it," marvels Al Oertel. "Think about what? That's frightening."

The year Al Oertel won his first Olympic gold medal in the discus, Dwight Eisenhower was president, Elvis Presley was an overnight sensation with "Heartbreak Hotel," George Blanda was the Chicago Bears' placekicker and each player's share for winning the NFL championship was $3,779.19.

That year was 1956, yet three more golds and some 175,000 throws later, he is still at it and aiming toward the trials that will precede the 1988 Games in Seoul. Al Oertel will be 52 years old.

Oertel on drugs: "I grew up when work was work, and there weren't any chemicals and all the other nonsense of today. Fortunately, it seems to be disappearing. But it's fear. Fear of being caught is what's stopping it."

The internationally famous tennis star, Martina Navratilova, travels almost constantly.

Because she checks in and out of hotels two or three times a week, she gets weary of giving her name and having to spell it for some of the desk clerks who don't know a thing about tennis or its stars.

So when she recently checked into a hotel and the desk clerk asked her name, she said, I'm tired. Take it off my luggage."

Three days went by and she had no calls or messages, something unusual for the famous athlete. She checked with the desk to see how she was registered.

The guest book read: Miss English Cowhide.

514 beds per 100,000 people. Rooms here cost less, however, than the prices paid nationally.

The report went on to point out if your main concern is a safe place to live, the state to choose is Kentucky. Only South Dakota, West Virginia and North Dakota (again) have lower crime rates. Careful driving, a car, however? Kentucky ranks 15th in the rate for traffic fatalities although we are trying to stay near the 55-mph speed limit. Only 17.5 percent of drivers exceeded 60 mph on specified highways. Oklahoma drivers are in more of a hurry, as 41 percent exceeded the speed limit.

Instead of driving around, Kentuckians stay home and watch cable TV. Some 53.4 percent of all households have cable, and the state ranks 10th in the nation in that measure.

Kentucky ranks 23rd among states in population based on 1985 estimates, but the state's rate of growth has slowed. About 28 percent of the population is under 18 years, which is above the national average. Utah has the highest percentage of children, and Florida the lowest. Kentucky's birth rate in 1983 was 14.7, below the national average, but we were third in the rate of births to teenage mothers.

Manufacturing workers represent 21.4 percent of the state's nonagricultural employment in 1984 placing us 21st from the top. North Carolina, with 32.4 percent manufacturing workers, was first; Wyoming, with 4.2 percent, was fifteth. In value added by production workers, Kentucky ranked 29th among all states.

Next year many of them won't be able to.

You may have cataracts or glaucoma and not even know it.

Especially if you're 60 and over. With cataracts, you may first notice a painless clouding of vision. While glaucoma gives its victims little, if any, warning of vision loss.

And both could lead to blindness. Because of this, our Cynthiana office and our new office in Carlisle are sponsoring the Sight Saver Program.

No-Cost Eye Health Screening

Senior citizens participating in this program can be examined at no cost, for the major causes of preventable blindness, including cataracts and glaucoma.

That's right. No cost. When you visit an optometrist at one of our two offices.

The Sight Saver Program is available to all senior citizens, 60 years and older who have not had an eye examination in the last 12 months. All you have to do is pick up the phone and call 606-234-1424 in Cynthiana or 606-289-7191 in Carlisle, or return the reply coupon.
