Watch math on KET
Nicholas County Elementary students in Debra Ammerman's and Joan Spickler's first grade classes watch a math program on Kentucky Educational Television. The elementary school has been recognized in recent years for its utilization of educational television.

Local students attend conference
Twelve members of the Nicholas County High School chapter of Future Homemakers of America recently participated in a weekend leadership training conference held at the Knoxville Convention Center in Knoxville, TN. Nearly 1000 young men and women and their adult advisors took part in activities designed to help them analyze their leadership qualities and develop their potential.

Chapter advisors Martha Taylor and Bonnie Metcalfe and parent Carolyn Deaton accompanied the members to the Knoxville meeting, where they attended general sessions, group leadership sessions, student body training, recreational activities and listened to a number of speakers and National FFA/FFA officers.

Future Homemakers of America is the only in-school student organization with the family as its central focus. Chapters develop programs with the recognition that everyone is a homemaker and in today's society, preparation to be a wage earner, community leader and caring family member is important to all young people.

Steve Rucker, Department of Education employee, is pictured showing Nicholas County Elementary School teacher Linda Herring the new IBM computer the school has received to be used in Project Vision. The project is designed to use computers to improve student performance on the essential skills. The program is a joint venture of the Department of Education and IBM.

Progressive Lenses

Many no-line bifocals fared these days are of the progressive type. Instead of just offering two powers of correction—one for distance and one for near vision—progressive bifocals also provide in-between correction. This gives the wearer clear vision at varying distances between the two extremes.

Patients who have never worn traditional bifocals adjust to the newer progressive lenses quickly, those who are accustomed to traditional bifocals sometimes take longer to make a comfortable transition.

Is the change from traditional bifocals to progressive lenses worth it for you? Many patients, especially those encountering problems seeing intermediate distances, are extremely pleased with the extra dimension offered by progressive lenses. Your optometrist's evaluation of your visual performance and needs, as well as your own ability and willingness to adapt to change, should be considered.
