Beautiful: Tips from the Hart

by Dotty Hart

Dear Hart,

I am on a diet, but the weight is coming off so slowly. Can I use a diuretic to get rid of weight? I know someone who took water pills and lost several pounds, fast. This seems such a painless way to take it off. Any tips?

B.A.S.

Dear B.A.S.,

Much overweight is caused by water retention. This is one reason why you often reach a plateau in weight loss. It is probably nature's way of giving your body a chance to collect its breath before more weight is supposed.

Water is produced, as fat is burned. For every pound of fat burned, in addition to what you drink, 1¼ pounds of water are produced in your body. This is nature's compensation to the body, but it can be so discouraging to the dieter.

Using a diuretic to get rid of water is risky, since the diuretic could act too fast eliminating many pounds of water within days, even hours. You can lose too many vitamins and other very important body chemicals. You could end up with a metabolic disturbance.

Some people complain that when they start on a reducing diet they actually gain instead of lose. The reason: first, excess body fat is burned, about four and a half ounces of water are formed and stored within the tissue for every ounce of the burned fat. So, the dieter may not lose weight immediately, in fact he may gain several pounds for a short time. But soon there is a change in the water tissue balance, and the scale shows the loss. Hang in there! The weight will go!

Model Tip:

Though I'm not a fan of frosted lipsticks, they can serve a purpose. A frosted shade, worn over a matte color, can act as a highlighter, and will make lips look fuller. You can get the same effect by blending pure white lip color in the center of the bottom lip.

WARNING! WARNING!

If your hair spray has METHYLENE CHLORIDE in it, trash it. Methylene chloride is a dangerous carcinogenic.

Please send questions to Beautiful Tips from the Hart, P.O. Box 7229, Louisville, Ky. 40272.

Time to get flu shot

Although Kentucky has had unusually warm temperatures until recently, state health officials are reminding people that it is time for flu shots.

"Any person, including a child, with a history of chronic heart or lung disease is in the top priority group for influenza vaccinations," said Reginald Finger, M.D., of the Department for Health Services. "Others in the high-risk group are those with chronic kidney disease or diabetes and residents of nursing homes and other chronic care facilities.

"Most people recover from the flu uneventfully," he said, "but it can cause serious health complications for persons in these high-risk groups."

Everyone older than 65 should be vaccinated as well, said Finger, who directs the department's communicable diseases branch. Other individuals who should be vaccinated are physicians, nurses and other health care professionals who have extensive contact with high-risk patients.

People younger than 35 who need flu immunizations should get two different shots this year, according to health officials. The make-up of this year's flu immunization is based on prevalent flu strains from the 1985-86 flu season.
