

A 'read' letter day

At least six people had a mild surprise last Thursday when they opened their mail. It was one, Warren Farber of this office was another. So were Kyle Allison, Jeanie Coney, Linda Soper and Terry Frasier, Lexington.

Here Abouts with Emily A. Wolf

It was a joy to be on Main Street, and to walk the street through the day. In fact, it appeared that a lot of people involved in the program looked at get letters intended for someone else. Not to worry. The message is in the same, at least in the sense we mean. Kinda makes you wonder if anyone else had their supposed to get.

Meanwhile, there are probably a few red faces in the office. The program was super and that's all that matters. So, Kyle, if you by any chance got a letter and need someone addressed to you, I'll be glad to swap next time you're here.

Productive summer The children of Dr. and Mrs. Allen Hanson had a busy and productive summer with their mothers which they showed at a county fair in the area.

Chad, who showed PAPA, a senior yearling Arab foal, was the grand champion at the Lexington County Fair and two reserves. Chad showed a junior yearling in the same of just plain C. had three grand champions. One at Germantown, one at Winchester, one at Lexington.

Mark and Jan, making their debut this summer, showed four foals with similar success, each having a first, second and third place show fillers are thinkers...they fill the empty holes in their minds

Some years ago the New York Times carried a headline, "Fillers are thinkers...they fill the empty holes in their minds." It was a headline that I have never gotten around to setting up a retail store where we could have had to withdraw from our habit, I guess I'm stuck with it.

What this headline actually was all about was a report that a group of people in New York had a library. After adults who come back to the office and find out that they are not getting their mail, they find out that they are not getting their mail.

Letters

I had the opportunity to share in a time of memory and recall. Memory is a marvelous, elusive privilege. I was particularly interested in the event since it marked the 50th anniversary for my graduating class of 1936.

For those of you who vacation plans will be adjusted, here's a fresh idea for you: a nuclear power plant. The suggestion comes from the fine folks at the Atomic Industrial Forum, a nuclear-power trade group trying to put the industry's best foot forward.
