Morehead State School of Education re-established

By Judy Yancey, Director
MSU Public Information

In keeping with the return of teacher education to prominence at the national level, Morehead State University has re-established its School of Education, effective August 1.

"The re-formation of the School of Education emphasizes MSU's commitment," said MSU President C. Nelson Grote.

"This action says to the public that teacher education is important to Morehead State. The new school also provides us a more effective administrative structure," Dr. Grote added.

"Our roots are in teacher education as this University in its early years was primarily a teacher college. MSU has a proud heritage both in preparing teachers for the classroom and, once there, providing for their professional development," Dr. Grote said.

According to national data, there is a growing core of teachers and administrators across the nation who are rapidly reaching retirement age.

"Add to that replacement rate, the number of new teachers who will be needed to meet the 'baby echo' demand and it becomes evident that teacher education must return to the prominence it once held," Dr. Grote said.

"MSU will be ready to meet that increase demand for teachers," the president said. "The re-establishment of school also is symbolic of the renewal of our partnership with the public schools."

The reorganization provides for better utilization of the faculty and staff which in turn will enable the University to increase its level of service to the region's schools, according to Dr. Larry W. Jones, dean of the College of Professional Studies.

Housed within the College of Professional Studies, the school will be headed by an associate dean of education. A national search is under way now for this administrator.

Under the new structure, approved by the MSU Board of Regents in May, there will be three distinct units: Elementary, Reading and Special Education with Dr. Paul R. McGhee as coordinator; Leadership and Secondary Education with Dr. Aleda Jean Wilson as coordinator, and an Educational Service Unit with Dr. Eugene F. Thibadeau as director.

Nearly 900 undergraduate and graduate students were enrolled last fall in teacher education courses at MSU's main and regional campuses. Approximately 37 full-time faculty members and four part-time faculty members comprise the teaching faculty.

"There was another factor to be considered in creating a clearer identity for MSU's teacher education program," Dr. Grote said.

"This is our year of record with the National Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education. The heightened visibility for teacher education will only enhance our NCATE report," he added.

Johnson attends Washington D.C. program

A Nicholas County High School junior, Sonya Johnson, was among 400 nationally selected senior high school students attending a week-long seminar studying the workings of democracy and the federal government, diplomacy and issues of foreign policy, in Washington, D. C.

Johnson attended "A Presidential Classroom for Young Americans".

Among the topics they studied were: the impact of federal court decisions on everyday lives, arms control and disarmament, national defense strategies, the challenge of diplomacy in Washington, the effects of the news media on American politics, and issues currently facing the 100th Congress.

While attending the seminar Johnson had the opportunity to meet Senator Mitch McConnell, and Representative Larry Hopkins.

"We talked about current issues and how they affect us," Johnson said.

About the program and experience, Johnson said "Presidential Classroom is a very organized program and one of the most important experiences of my life."

As to what Johnson was particularly impressed by, she replied, "The patriotism of the people, the pride for the country and the importance of everything that occurs in Washington, D. C."

Founded in 1968 with origins dating back to the John F. Kennedy administration, Presidential Classroom is a private, nonprofit, nonpartisan, tax-exempt, educational organization.

Students who attend Presidential Classroom must carry a minimum "B" grade point average, place among the top 25 percent of their hometown class, be active participants in student organizations and community groups, demonstrate an interest in American government and receive the written approval of their high school principals.

Counted among the Classroom's many alumni are scores of federal, state and local leaders and Capitol Hill staff members.

Blue Licks celebration attracts many

By Heather Mathes
Of The Carlisle Mercury Staff

Blue Licks was humming with activity this past weekend and all ages had a chance to join in the fun.

Encamped in the Blue Licks bottom was a trader, a sutler, a renegade Indian, a medicine man, and various other mountain men, women, and children.

Phyllis Mullikin, the trader, decided to start the outfitting business when she traveled to Friendship, Indiana and viewed its primitive camp display.

She explained traders of the Old West prepared wagon trains with virtually every need. Rifle Frolics, or Rendezvous were trading sessions in which the men collected supplies and the women exchanged gossip.

Gayle Fried the sutler, or store-keeper sold hand-made clothes and jewelry.

She said setting up camp is hard work but also great fun.

Larry Strickler, the renegade Indian from Manchester, Ohio was always interested in the pre-revolutionary war era. He displayed hand-made utensils, and other leather goods.

John Rayborne, the medicine man, also of Manchester, Ohio got interested in primitive camping two years ago when he joined the White Hawks Primitive Rifleman.

Chuck Flaherty a mountain man from Bellevue, Kentucky is a member of the National Muzzle Loading Rifle Association.

He has been such places as Governor Bibbs Park, Indiana, Shawnee Park, Ohio, and the five state rendezvous of the Old North-West in Michigan.

Gregg Biddle, Mike Lury, Jerry Hill, and Lin Haley, all of Cynthiana also joined in the fun of primitive camping.

During the day a pioneer fashion show was held and a large craft fair featured many displays.

Private craft shop owners such as Phil and Bobbi Pack of Morehead, sold woodworking, paintings, and other original ideas for decorating. Church groups and organizations sold food and drinks at an enclosed shelter-house. In the evening, the Butler County Cloggers entertained a large crowd.

Before the outdoor drama began the Daniel Boone Singers sang a medley of favorites. The drama's story was taken from the memoirs of Pvt. Benjamin Cooper and narrated what happened at Blue Licks and Bryan-Station.

Some of the actors included local people; Johnny Sibert and Jamie Anderson of Carlisle.

Mark Ball of the American Council of Indians from Cincinnati, Ohio answered several questions and everyone was particularly impressed with his native Indian dress. Others included members of the National Muzzle Loading Rifle Association.

Overall, it was a memorable weekend full of comradery, friendship, and family. Many learned something new.
