Medicaid services to expand

Home based and Community based services

The Kentucky Cabinet for Human Resources received a welcome gift this holiday season — permission from the federal government to expand the special Medicaid program that offers an alternative to nursing home care.

The home- and community-based services program offers some low-income elderly and disabled people a chance to live at home if they also have the right kinds of care and support from family and friends.

"While some Kentuckians need the round-the-clock care provided by nursing homes, others can live at home with the extra help our program offers," said state Medicaid Services Commissioner Hughes Walker.

Offered since July 1982 in Bluegrass Area Development District counties, the program is scheduled to be expanded in phases.

"In January we will begin offering home- and community-based services in Buffalo Trace, Gateway, Kentucky River and Cumberland Valley area development districts," Walker said.

"In March we will extend the services into Barren River, Lincoln Trail, Lake Cumberland and Northern Kentucky ADDs. The service willbe offered in remaining counties July 1.

"In the last year alone we served 302 residents in Bluegrass ADD counties; either postponing or preventing their entering a nursing home," he said. "All these people were eligible for intermediate or skilled nursing care. They preferred to participate in our program and remain at home."

Their choice saved money for the Medicaid program. "Last year the average length of stay in this program was 194 days at an average cost of $1,451 per person. This compares to 129 days in skilled care at an average cost per person of $6,498 and 262 days at intermediate care at an average cost of $7,449 each," the commissioner noted.

Local home health agencies provide services under this program in the Bluegrass ADD cnties.

The Medicaid Services department expects to have the interagency arrangement to provide services statewide.

Kentuckians interested in participating in the program may contact the local Department for Social Insurance office, a local home health agency, or, if they are in a hospital or nursing home, the staff in charge of planning a patient's discharge.

Velinda Walters, coordinator of the program, pointed out that participants in this special program must be Medicaid-eligible, but they will be allowed to have a higher monthly income than under the regular Medicaid program.

Program services include homemaker services, personal care, respite care, adult day health care and minor home adaptations.

"These are in addition to the traditional home health services that have been covered by Medicaid for many years, Walters said.

"The services we provide under this program are meant to enhance existing community and family support, not replace it. We're building on the support that already is there."

Commissioner Walker expects this new program to complement the Department for Social Services' in-home services program, which currently provides similar services.

"That department now will be freer to serve more people above the Medicaid income level. With both programs, we will be able to serve a greater number of people in need."
