UNDERSTANDING CORRECTIVE LENSES

The job of a lens is to correct imperfect vision. it is made of either impact resistant glass or durable plastic. Both materials have the capability to refract (bend) light rays. The lens must be free of air bubbles or other distortions, and meet exacting specifications prescribed by your optometrist. As the power of the lens increases, so does its thickness.

There are basically three types of lenses, or a combination of those types:

Convex - This lens is thicker in the center than at the edges and gathers light rays towards a point. It is prescribed for farsighted or presbyopic eyes that cannot bend light rays as much as they should.

Concave - This lens is thinner at the center than at the edges. It spreads light apart as that light enters the eye, and puts a clearly focused image on the retina. This type of lens is prescribed to correct nearsighted eyes.

Cylindrical - This lens is curved more in one direction than the others. It is prescribed to correct astigmatism.

Very often a cylinder is ground into a convex or concave lens, for many patients have some astigmatism as well as being nearsighted or farsighted. Bifocals and other multifocal lenses combine elements from any or all of the three basic lenses into one special lens.

Hamilton named to list

Gary Hamilton, a University of Kentucky senior from Nicholas County, has been named to the dean's list for the 1987 spring semester.

To be named to this list, a student must have attained a high academic standing based on a 4.0 grading system.

UK is a comprehensive university with 23,000 students and more than 1,700 faculty on the Lexington campus.

Students may choose from more than 100 different fields of study at UK. Each year, UK graduates approximately 6,300 students and 20 percent of those earning bachelor degrees go on to graduate and professional schools.

Hamilton, a senior in production agriculture, was honored by the dean of the College of Agriculture. He lives on Jacktown Road, Carlisle.

Blood drive scheduled July 20

The Nicholas County Donor group and Central Kentucky Blood Center have scheduled a summer blood drive for Monday, July 20, from 2 to 9 p.m. at the First United Methodist Church.

Every donor will receive a free summer T-shirt.

Also, all donors will receive free soft drinks and will be eligible for a random drawing for a $5.00 discount on a meal at Lee's Restaurant and a free VCR rental from Family Video.

Donating only takes a few minutes and it's perfectly safe. Your donation may help three patients through the component therapy. Please call Barbara Hopkins at 289-2631 for more information about the upcoming blood drive.
