Caution urged

Fireworks displays are dazzling and beautiful. The Kentucky Society to Prevent Blindness urges everyone to play it safe this year so you'll still be able to see them next year.

The U. S. Consumer Product Safety Commission estimated that 12,600 people were injured in fireworks-related accidents last year. Alarmingly, these injuries have increased 22 percent over the 1985 figures.

While some of this increase can be attributed to a dual celebration of the Fourth of July and the Centennial of the State of Liberty, it should be noted that fireworks injuries have been increasing steadily every year for the past decade.

More than 15 percent of all fireworks injuries reported by Product Safety Commission involved the eye.

In 1985, the American Academy of Ophthalmology, an organization of eye care physicians, established a national reporting system to collect fireworks eye injuries. Of the 639 cases reported, 41 percent caused permanent eye damage.

Another cause for concern is that despite the increasing number of injuries, many states are relaxing their laws regarding the sale of fireworks. Unfortunately, the range of state laws and their market make fireworks readily available.

At least as many injuries occur in states with fireworks laws as without.

To help you fireworks safely, the following guidelines are recommended:

• Before using any type of fireworks, check state or local laws.

• Only adults should be allowed to discharge fireworks. Even "adult" fireworks is a danger to children.

• Read and follow all instructions and warning labels.

• Fireworks should only be used outdoors in a clear area away from homes, buildings and combustible materials.

• Be sure others are out of range before lighting fireworks.

• Keep water nearby for emergencies and making malfunctioning fireworks. Never handle or attempt to relight a firework that does not go off.

• Never ignite fireworks in a container, glass and metal containers can easily be shattered.

• Those adults using fireworks should use eye protection (safety goggles or spectacles with side shields) to reduce the possibility of eye injuries.

• Store fireworks in cool, dry areas.

• A physician should check all eye injuries.

• Your safest bet for the holidays—leave fireworks to the professionals!
